President's Message

Something you've known all along

By HARRY AUPRICH, Ph D
President, Bloomsburg University

During the five years I have served Bloomsburg University, I have frequently been impressed with the great pride you, the alumni, have in the accomplishments of your alma mater. Increasingly, people outside the BU family have come to know what you've known all along — that Bloomsburg University is an exceptional school. Several years ago, Martin Nemko included BU in his book, How to Get an Ivy League Education at a State University, and just recently accolades came our way as a result of a survey of "America's Best College Buys" conducted by Money magazine. In an article written by Jersey Gilbert for the magazine's Fall 1990 "Money Guide" issue, BU received a ranking of 30th for "its quality relative to price," placing BU in the top 10 percent of America's public colleges and universities.

Auprich

Money used 17 measures of academic performance to rank the schools in their survey — items such at SAT scores and class rank of incoming freshmen, the student-faculty ratio, tuition expenses, and the number of books in the library. While these traditional quantitative measures deserve consideration, there are other factors, things less easily measured, that have a more direct bearing on institutional quality.

Personally, I believe that the ultimate measure of a university lies in what students do with what they learn. This thought was echoed in a recently released report titled, "Priorities for the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education During the 1990s."

"Though traditional scholarship, applied research, and public service, including regional economic development activities, constitute important parts of our mission, the State System's greatest contribution to the economic development and social well-being of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania lies in the fullest possible development of our students' capacities to be effective professionals, responsible parents and partners, informed citizens, and creative leaders in their communities and in the state. Hence, nothing is more important than what we teach — and what our 96,000 students learn."

> "The ultimate measure of a university lies in what students do with what they learn."

What is it that we want Bloomsburg University students to learn? Our general education program outlines a set of outcomes we want every student to achieve. Specifically, we want our students to have a familiarity with the major contributions of human knowledge in the humanities, social sciences, natural sciences and mathematics in order to be at home everywhere in the universe of ideas; to assess the validity of the ideas they will hear and read by applying analytical and quantitative thinking skills; to understand the approaches used to gain knowledge through the development of critical thinking abilities so that they can be lifelong learners; and to be able to communicate effectively, both hearing the thoughts of others as well as conveying their own. We desire to instill in our students a greater appreciation of literature, art, music and theatre and to foster a greater appreciation of the need for fitness, recreation, and survival skills, thereby enhancing the capacity to enjoy a full and healthy life. We want our students to have a better sense of their relationship to the physical and biological environments and to their society and the world community so that, based on a true sense of respect, they will be able to make a meaningful contribution to the well being of the earth, their neighbors, and people everywhere. And, most importantly, we want our students to be able to take all they learn and respond to it by making independent and responsible value judgements and decisions according to high ethical values and life goals.

While we certainly appreciate the recognition which comes from being included in national publications, these less quantifiable qualities are the true measure of our institution — after all, the real test for a university is what students do with what they learn. You, our alumni, are living proof that BU is scoring at the top of its class, and, with your continued interest and support, Bloomsburg University will continue to be recognized for the fine institution it is.

BU cited as one of 'Best College Buys'

Bloomsburg University and five other Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education universities were ranked among the top 100 public-supported institutions in the nation following a survey by Money magazine that examines "America's Best College Buys."

In an article written by Jersey Gilbert for the magazine's Fall 1990 "Money Guide" issue, BU received a ranking of 30th for "its quality relative to price" in comparison to other public institutions throughout the country. The ranking places BU in the top 10 percent of America's public colleges and universities.

According to Gilbert's article, Money developed a system to examine all public higher educational institutions (they also produced a survey of the top 100 private schools) and identified those that deliver the "best education for the buck." The magazine used statistical analysis to determine the expected cost of each school, based on 17 measures of academic performance, and compared that figure to the school's actual cost.

"Schools that charged less than their 'expected' cost scored highly," wrote Gilbert. "Those that charged more fell in the rankings. We eliminated schools whose performance scores indicated that they provide a below-average education."

In the article, Gilbert wrote that Money used performance data which could be "compared fairly from school to school," and said the magazine solicited the help of educational experts and consultants to conduct its survey.

"To create the most consistent system for cost comparison, we decided to use the school's full official price, and to use out-of-state charges in the case of public schools," Gilbert wrote. "We did not consider two-year colleges and those that attract mainly adult students, and we eliminated narrowly specialized and sectarian colleges."

While the rankings highlight those institutions that "provide strong educations at prices that are more than fair," they are not intended to serve as a definitive guide to choosing a college, Gilbert wrote.

Other State System of Higher Education universities receiving the top 100 ranking included Indiana (22nd), Shippensburg (29th), Millersville (42nd), Clarion (45th), and Lock Haven (55th).

Communication — a two-way street

By G. THOMAS HUGHES III '76
President, BU Alumni Association

As another year is just getting started, it is always a good time to slow down, briefly, and to survey the surroundings. The Alumni Association, after 18 months of hard work by the board of directors, has put a long range plan into motion. As with most plans, we put a lot of "pie in the sky" thoughts on the table. I must say it is a document of which we as an association can be very proud.

The two main thrusts of the plan are communication and involvement. Without vehicles, such as The Alumni Quarterly, our job would be ten times more difficult in trying to keep you informed of happenings within the organization. The Quarterly is just one aspect of keeping in touch, but it is our most important tool in getting that job done. It allows us to tell you about upcoming chapter events, exciting new programs such as "Share a Day," and even filling you in about the latest happenings of your fellow classmates, friends, and family through the class notes.

Hughes

Communication is a two-way street, however. We need to hear from you. If you move, let us know. If you have an addition to your family, let us know. If you get a promotion, or change jobs, let us know. If you run into someone you haven't see in 15 or 20 years, let us know. 1-800-526-0254. That's all it takes. The capable staff at the Fenstemaker Alumni House is always ready to pick up the phone when you call. Try it, it really does work.

As I mentioned, the second major area of concentration in the long range plan is involvement. Getting alumni involved. Doing what? Attend a athletic event, either home or away. Try Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre, Long Island, or Philadelphia to see themen's and women's basketball or swimming and diving teams in action, or the wrestling team lock horns with the toughest talent in the country.

Try a cultural event on campus; there is sure to be something going on when you call. Come to an alumni event in your area. Call a fellow alum and tell them that you are going. And tell them they should call someone, too.

Volunteering is another way to get involved. Help out at the Fenstemaker Alumni House if you live in the Bloomsburg area. Get involved in planning an event in your area. Help out at a college night program at the local high school or community college. Help to organize and then attend your class reunion. Participate in the "Share a Day" program by allowing a BU student to visit you for a day to find out what your job is really like. Talk to people about BU. Communicate one good thing about BU to a friend or neighbor each week. Come back to campus to see how beautiful it is. Stop at the Fenstemaker Alumni House to say hello.

Communication and involvement — two keys to a successful Alumni Association. Won't you meet us halfway?

On behalf of the Alumni Association Board of Directors and the entire staff at the Fenstemaker Alumni House, I would like to wish everyone a healthy and prosperous 1991.

State System numbers defy national trends

More women, non-traditional, and full-time students are enrolling in Pennsylvania's 14 State System of Higher Education universities, according to 1990 fall enrollment statistics.

Headcount enrollments at the state-owned universities for the 1990 fall semester increased 2.8 percent, or 2,714 students, to 99,082. Since the creation of the State System in July 1983, headcount enrollments have grown by 19,800, an annual average increase of 2,475. Over the last eight years, State System enrollment has risen 25 percent.

The number of full-time State System students rose 2,105 to 78,051, a 2.8 percent increase. Part-time enrollments also increased by 609 students to 21,031, a three percent increase.

State System Chancellor James H. McCormick said, "State System enrollments continue to defy national trends and rise at a steady pace. These increases are a direct result of the System's primary mission of providing a high quality education to the citizens of Pennsylvania at an affordable cost.

"However, the State System is confronting the real limits of our funding, physical capacity, and staffing to enroll significant numbers of additional students," Dr. McCormick said. "Recently, the State System Planning Commission recommended as a priority for the 1990s that enrollments be stabilized for a five-year period to main the universities' educational quality unless operating and capital resources for growth are provided."

> "Most of the growth . . . has been fueled by an increase in the number of women attending college.
> ". . . Women students account for 59 percent of the State System's overall enrollment."

Chancellor McCormick added, "The State System plans to work with the General Assembly and the Governor to address these concerns and develop solutions allowing the State System to continue its historic access mission."

"Over 78 percent of our students are enrolled full-time," said Dr. Kerry L. Moyer, State System director of research. "In a declining statewide pool of high school graduates, the State System is attracting more of these students."

Dr. Moyer added, "The participation rate of college-bound high school seniors in Pennsylvania has grown rapidly over the last eight years."

Recent Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency statistics indicate the participation rate of high school seniors has jumped from 48.7 percent in 1983 to 58.3 percent in 1989.

"Most of the growth in the participation rate has been fueled by an increase in the number of women attending college," Dr. Moyer said. "The State System's enrollment numbers reflect that growth."

The number of women students attending State System universities increased at a 4-to-1 ratio over men in 1990, according to enrollment figures. Women students account for 59 percent of the State System's overall enrollment. Universities' statistics show 58,459 women enrolled this year, an increase of 1,935, or 3.4 percent. The number of men attending State System institutions increased slightly to 40,623, an increase of 778, or almost 2.0 percent.

Enrollment of non-traditional students, those age 25 or older, also continued to grow. Currently, one of every five State System students is over 25. For the 1990 fall semester, 21,145 non-traditional students are enrolled, an increase of 1,019, or 5.1 percent over 1989. Non-traditional students account for 21.3 percent of all state university students. Statistics show that the average age of State System students is 24 years old.

"Non-traditional students usually return to school after a significant change in their lives, such as divorce, a change in careers, a loss of a job, or after raising a family," Dr. Moyer said. "However, some older students matriculate for professional development, self-development, or use of their leisure time."

Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education comprises 14 universities located throughout the Commonwealth, with 690 buildings on over 4,000 acres of land. With over 10,500 employees, the State System is the 18th largest employer in the state.

BU license plate gets green light

Good news!

By Homecoming 1991 you will see Bloomsburg University license plates as you travel the state's highways.

As 1990 drew to a close, we finally obtained enough paid orders to contract with the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation to produce special organization license plates bearing the Bloomsburg University Husky.

PennDOT informs us that once the Alumni Association has completed the initial application process, it will take about a month for the design to be drawn and approved, and about three months for a metal sample to be produced. Then it will take a few more months for the first 500 plates to be manufactured and distributed. So by early fall, BU plates should be spotted.

The Alumni Association Board of Directors especially appreciates the patience of alumni and friends who placed their orders as long ago as last March and April. We want you to know that your checks have been deposited, and the interest earned will help to offset the design and preparation costs paid by the Association. Without your loyal support and your patience, this project could not have succeeded.

In the near future, alumni and friends who have ordered the license plates will receive an "Application for Special Organization Registration Plate" which asks for information about your vehicle. Please return these applications to the Alumni Office, and we will send them to PennDOT along with our check.

It's not too late to order a license plate. Call us on our toll-free number: 1-800-526-0254.

The Chestnut Brass Company will perform at 8 p.m. on March 15 in Mitrani Hall

Campus voluntarism reflects renewed commitment to service

New volunteer services office plays 'matchmaker' role

The tradition of volunteer community service at Bloomsburg University is both rich and varied. Campus organizations and individuals have for years participated in volunteer projects such as Special Olympics and the Red Cross Bloodmobile. In January 1990, a Volunteer Services Office was established to encourage additional campus voluntarism. Staffed itself by volunteers, the Office has established campus chapters of Habitat for Humanity and Amnesty International. These chapters have in turn sponsored the construction of a Habitat home in Bloomsburg and the maintenance of letterwriting campaigns to free international prisoners of conscience.

The future of community service at Bloomsburg University is bright. A volunteer opportunities handbook, listing scores of volunteer placements, recently has been released. New projects, designed in partnership with the Volunteer Services Office, are underway.

Bob Peiffer, the volunteer services coordinator at BU, spoke with several students about the community service initiative.

Peiffer: Help me to understand the significance of this campus initiative. What has it meant for students?

Wendy Pristash (Graduate student/Student volunteer coordinator from Whitehall): People are getting together to address a variety of important problems. The temptation is always to assume that problems are too big, that nothing substantive can be done to make a difference in our world. Students increasingly are unwilling to think that way. They have decided instead to make a start, to take a first step. And that's how changes are made.

Peiffer: Habitat for Humanity affords students opportunities to be of service throughout the world. Several recent BU graduates are pursuing volunteer careers as Habitat International Partners. Habitat projects also provide opportunities for service here at home. Currently Habitat student volunteers are working with the Bloomsburg Women's Center to renovate a new domestic violence shelter. What is the history of that project?

Phil Price (Sophomore from Lititz): The Women's Center acquired its new facility earlier this year. Staffpersons recognized almost immediately that volunteer help would be needed to renovate the shelter. And so they approached Husky Habitat, our Habitat campus chapter, to provide volunteer labor. Scores of students have responded to this appeal for assistance. Sororities and fraternities have been especially supportive.

To see a project like this take shape is a great experience. To know that you're making a difference in someone's life is rewarding. You may be tired at the end of the work day, but it feels good.

Peiffer: The Women's Center project is the second project to be undertaken locally by Husky Habitat. What was the first project to be completed?

Jim Donohue (Junior from Mantua, N.J.): Last spring we rehuilt a house on East First Street, this for a Vietnamese father and his three sons. It was exciting to work on that house every weekend through the winter, to see the project take shape. In just seven months a burned out shell became a home for a family in need. In the process, students developed new skills and made new friends. The interaction with town volunteers was enjoyable. We became a family.

Peiffer: You have accomplished quite a bit.

Donohue: And for that, we're grateful. We also had a chance last year to travel to South Carolina during spring break. What a tremendous experience! We built several homes in Charleston for families who had been displaced by Hurricane Hugo.

Peiffer: What does the future hold for Husky Habitat?

Donohue: A national team of Habitat volunteers will make its way through Bloomsburg next August. We'll provide them sites on which to build. Hopefully we'll be able to complete at least one home during the time that they are here. This is the stuff of which memories are made.

WALKING FOR THE HUNGRY — A record $10,127 was raised by the 1990 CROPWALK in which members of the BU community participated. More than 200 walkers and 1,300 sponsors assisted in breaking the old record of $6,572 set in 1989, according to Robert Peiffer, president of the CROPWALK board and a protestant campus minister at BU. "Since all expenses were covered by contributions separate from the funds that were raised by CROPWALK, we are able to submit the entire amount to Church World Service," says Peiffer. Church World Service, the parent organization of CROP, describes itself as "one of the foremost organizations waging the war against world hunger." Twenty-five percent of the funds raised are returned to the local community to help its relief efforts.*

Peiffer: Are there other ways for campus volunteers to address issues of poverty housing and homelessness?

Jason Bush (Freshman from Hallstead): Alice Price and I graduated in mid-October from the Freshman Leadership Development Program. Looking for a way to exercise leadership on campus, we attended a conference at Penn sponsored by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness. Witnessing homelessness firsthand, as we did in Philadelphia, made us determined to address the issue here at home.

Peiffer: How have you tackled the problem?

Bush: The information which we gathered at the conference we've been excited to share with the campus. With the support of the Volunteer Office and together with other first year students, we planned and organized a local observance of Hunger and Homelessness Week. During the week we lobbied our representatives in Harrisburg and Washington, spoke to high school youth groups, and sponsored a dusk-to-dawn vigil to shine some light on the plight of the homeless. Early in December, many of us vountered our time at Luther Place, a soup kitchen and shelter in Washington.

Peiffer: Graduates of the Freshman Leadership Program are beginning to impact this campus in a variety of ways, are they not?

Andy Wilson (Junior from Bloomsburg): They really are. And they are addressing not only issues of hunger and homelessness, but academic retention of at-risk youths as well.

Peiffer: Tell me more.

Wilson: Over the summer, the Volunteer Office helped me start a program called S.H.A.R.E. (Students Helping Adolescents Reach Excellence). Our volunteers, most of the Freshmen Leadership personnel, use kind words and pats on the back to build character and enhance self-esteem in middle school students.

Peiffer: How does your program work?

Wilson: Guidance counselors at Bloomsburg Middle School have identified for us eighty kids who can benefit from a mentoring program like S.H.A.R.E. We try to let these kids know that they are okay, academic trouble notwithstanding. We want them to understand that we care, that we want to see them do well in school. To see the kids' faces just light up, that's priceless. This is a program in which everyone wins.

Peiffer: Campus volunteers, then, work in partnership with local schools. Are there social service agencies to which students provide assistance?

Gigi Zitkus (Junior from Shenandoah): More than twenty agencies. Yes.

Peiffer: An example?

Zitkus: In cooperation with the Area Agency on Aging, some fifty campus volunteers conduct a socialization program called Ring-A-Day. While the primary purpose of the program is to provide weekly telephone companionship for older adults, our student callers have discovered numerous medical emergenices as well and have alerted caseworkers to instances of client need. Some clients tell us that their participation in the program keeps them alive. It keeps them informed, engaged.

This program helps not only the older adults, however. It helps our students as well. Homesick freshmen, for example, talk through their problems with their clients. That, at times, is

Students 'lining up' for volunteer community service, says Ausprich

"I firmly believe that our renewed commitment to service is changing us individually and collectively."

In support of Pennsylvania's "renewed commitment" to volunteer community service, students at colleges and universities across the state are "lining up" to help others, says BU President Harry Ausprich.

Ausprich delivered remarks November 19 during a news conference on student volunteer services at the Capitol Rotunda in Harrisburg. The event was arranged by the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities' "Campus Compact" — an action-oriented coalition of college and university chief executive officers to promote a greater commitment to public service.

"At least part of the reason that a generation or two of students lost their enthusiasm for service was because we adults did not value service," Ausprich said. "We failed to provide opportunities where young people could learn the importance of service and the joy and fulfillment of helping others."

Ausprich, a nationally recognized expert in communications and theater, said students at BU are presently involved in a variety of volunteer service activities. "At Bloomsburg we have found that when we value service and provide opportunities to serve, students at lining up to help," he said, citing changes in the way students are thinking about volunteer public service.

"An increase in the number of students who value involvement in community action programs, who want to promote racial understanding, who are concerned about the environment and the world around them . . . these are changing students' attitudes evident on our campus by a resurgence of student involvement in volunteer service activities," he added.

Among the many public service activities at BU, said Ausprich, is a recently started intercampus collaborative program with student volunteers at Wilkes University, King's College, Penn State-Wilkes Barre and Luzerne County Community College to address the lack of affordable housing in Northcentral Pennsylvania.

"I firmly believe that our renewed commitment to service is changing us individually and collectively," Ausprich said. "It is causing us to think about others and their needs . . . and to set aside our differences and personal agendas to become a better, more nurturing place to be."

"Pennsylvania Campus Compact" consists of 36 member institutions across the state, representing all sectors of higher education.

Freshmen leaders work with at-risk youths

A chance to help area youths less fortunate than herself motivated freshman leader Karen Kozlowski to spend her leisure time as a volunteer worker in the recently developed SHARE program at BU.

"Now that I have obtained leadership skills, I really want to use them," declared the secondary education major from Wayne.

Kozlowski, one of 60 BU freshmen who participated in the university's Freshman Leadership Program during the first six weeks of the fall semester, is excited to have an opportunity to begin demonstrating the leadership skills she learned.

"Since I now know how to set goals, make decisions and motivate others, I want to show that I can help these kids to do some things," she said.

Kozlowski and other freshmen who completed the leadership program in mid-October, along with student volunteers from various campus organizations, have joined Andy Wilson to start SHARE — an acronym for Students Helping Adolescents Reach Excellence. Under Wilson's direction, the students are helping 80 disadvantaged sixth, seventh and eighth grade Bloomsburg Middle School students gain a new outlook on life.

Wilson, a secondary eduation and history major from State College, initiated the program with the help of BU's Student Volunteer Services office.

"The middle school students were identified by their guidance counselor as having some social handicaps that could affect their ability to get along with others and possibly hinder their learning potential in school," he said. "SHARE's approach is to have student volunteers from BU conduct large-group social activities with these 'at-risk' middle schoolers in an effort to teach them how to perform better in our society."

According to Wilson, the student volunteers will arrange a variety of after-school and weekend activities, approximately one outing for groups of no more than 20 middle schoolers, every two or three weeks. Similar to the national Big Brother and Big Sister programs, the university students will supervise the youths, who range in age from 10 to 14 years old, on bowling outings, hayrides, trips to museums and much more.

"We'll also be teaching them teamwork skills by participating in some of the university's QUEST (BU's outdoor adventure program) activities and playing some non-competitive games," he said.

BU's Freshman Leadership Program, facilitated by members of the university's student life staff, provides freshmen with an opportunity to acquire skills that can prepare them for on-campus leadership positions. The program is designed to help the students learn how to set goals, motivate others, resolve conflicts, make decisions and solve problems. Kozlowski and 59 other freshmen were selected to participate in the 30-hour pilot program after they submitted applications last summer. Maximum enrollment was 60.

"The program was a really big confidence booster," she said. "We learned how to do all these things, and now we're ready to help the middle school kids in the SHARE program."

Laura Davis, a guidance counselor at Bloomsburg Middle School, says she and

BU alumna, students 'making a difference'

By Gwenn Evans Wells

"One hundred ten percent." That's how BU student volunteer tutors describe the efforts of 1982 graduate Bonnie Kramer, who coordinates a growing team of student and community volunteers for Project RETAIN, an innovative dropout prevention program in the Berwick Area School District.

As "case manager" for the two-year-old program, Kramer is providing as valuable a role model for her tutors as they are for their middle school students.

"She motivates us," explains Trieste Shafer, echoing a common refrain of the 56 university students currently volunteering time to Project RETAIN. "I feel like I can make a difference."

The investment is paying dividends — not only in helping to reduce district-wide dropout rates from 44 students in the 1988-1989 school year to 27 in 1989-1990, but also in higher grades, better attendance records, better attitudes, and greater self-esteem for target students, says Kramer. There are also dividends for the university, including an increase in the number of direct hands-on teaching experiences as reflecting renewed student activism.

The Bloomsburg University-Berwick partnership is a prime example of creative efforts to integrate community service into campus curriculum as promoted by Pennsylvania Campus Compact, an action-oriented coalition of 36 colleges and universities across the state. Tutors and students have also pledged to take on roles of "active duty citizens," providing volunteer community service as promoted by PennSERVE, the Governor's Office of Citizen Service.

Project RETAIN is a cooperative effort of the Berwick Area School District and the regional Central Susquehanna Intermediate Unit. Funding for Kramer's full-time position depends on the success of the program and available funds through the state's "Successful Student Partnership Act."

"at risk" of failing to graduate or acquire basic skills to succeed in the workplace and society. Kramer says the working definition of "at risk" is deliberately broad because "all students can be considered 'at-risk' at some point in their educational careers."

Identifying "at-risk" students considers the impact of a wide variety of factors including home environment, personal values about education, peer group pressure, and drug or alcohol abuse. Other factors are ethnic and economic status of the student's family. Any or all of these factors can affect academic performance, attendance, and school behavior. The more negative factors, such as a decline in student retentions and an increase in failing grades, are signs that students might need help.

Help is offered not only through tutoring, but also in a whole series of Project RETAIN services ranging from individual and parent support to small group activities focusing on self-esteem, communication and decision making, goal setting, career planning, pre-employment skills and problem solving.

Promoting business and education partnerships is another key service. With the help of the Greater Berwick Area Chamber of Commerce, Kramer actively recruits local businesses to provide career awareness programs, mentors, or tours to expose students to the work environment.

"Bonnie built the project from the ground up," explains Julie Corrigan, special project manager for the Intermediate Unit. "She's done a great job getting both the students, and the business community involved, excited and interested."

Kramer was a group therapist for the mentally ill and an instructor for the Columbia County Juvenile Probation Office before taking on Project RETAIN in 1988. A sociology major while a student at BU, she drew on her own familiarity with the campus and department chairpersons to promote the program and personally recruit volunteers. This fall, she linked her recruitment efforts with the university's Student Volunteer Services Office.

Participation in the tutoring project has grown steadily from 12 students to 56 students donating a total of 1,792 hours this fall. Students also provide their own transportation. Travel time for two weekly trips to Berwick, and full-time student internships in the last three semesters raise the total time commitment from BU students to nearly 13,000 hours.

The opportunity for practical hands-on experience to complement the teaching curriculum has drawn many BU students to the tutoring program, says Kramer. As volunteers they learn how to develop a teacher-student relationship. They also get a good look at different learning styles, "especially because this program targets those students who are most difficult to teach,"

Frank Gerosky '32 recognized for volunteer work

Frank Gerosky '32 was recognized this fall with the Mary E. Dreishach Memorial Award for Distinguished Community Service, given by the Luzerne/Wyoming Counties Bureau for the Aging's Retired Senior Volunteer Program.

Mr. Gerosky's service as a volunteer was featured in a lengthy article written by Dick Cosgrove, which appeared in the October 21 edition of The Sunday Dispatch. Excerpts from that article follow:

Those who know Frank Gerosky and have been involved with him in one way or another through the years can easily understand why he is so successful in his volunteer work.

The fountain of knowledge Frank brings to his volunteer work is a result of his fine education and his lengthy career in teaching which found him assuming many different roles, including teacher, counselor, and principal.

This knowledge and his experience coupled with his genuine sincerity and his pleasant personality result in a highly successful and most sought after volunteer.

He received his elementary certification at Bloomsburg and later earned a bachelor's degree at the University of Scranton. He was awarded a master's degree by Bucknell University.

He began his teaching career at the Edison School of the Jenkins Township School District. In 1950 he transferred to the high school, where he began teaching English and Social Studies until he was named head of the business department in the mid-1950s.

In January 1915, Gerosky was named principal of what had become Jenkins Township/Yatesville Borough High School. He held that post for two years until the Northeast School District was created, at which time he was named a guidance counselor. After a subsequent merger, he was promoted to the post of supervisor of guidance in the Pittston Area School District. He held that post until his retirement in 1976.

During his teaching career, especially in the later years, Gerosky also taught night school and summers at Wilkes-Barre Business College dealing mostly with the operation of business machines and a variety of business related subjects.

Following his retirement from Pittston Area, he joined the faculty of Lackawanna Junior College in Wilkes-Barre as an admission counselor, a role in which he served for seven years until retiring "completely" in 1982.

Frank's success as a volunteer for the senior citizens is a reflection of his great scholastic background, but it is equally reflective of his willingness to serve his fellowman in countless other endeavors.

He actually began volunteer work immediately following his retirement from school work when he gave his services to the RSVP program at Nesbitt Memorial Hospital in Kingston, working first in the public relations department and then assisting with clinic work in the Nesbitt satellites in the area.

He also contributed his services to the Wilkes-Barre YMCA for a two-year period when he tutored English to youngsters participating in an therapeutic. Older adults have a lot of wisdom to share. They even know where the good restaurants are.

Peiffer: Experts suggest that a successful program of campus volunteerism is not possible without the support of the residence halls. True?

Sarah Belcher (Freshman from Branchville, N.J.): Absolutely true.

Peiffer: An example of residence hall involvement?

Belcher: In partnership with the Volunteer Office and hundreds of campuses throughout the world, residence hall students organized a candlelight vigil in observance with the World Summit for Children. Personally, it was a great experience. I was really impressed that hundreds of our students could join together with hundreds of townspeople to call attention to the international needs of children everywhere. Our observance was the largest in the commonwealth.

Beth Davis (Sophomore from Paoli): Residence hall students routinely make emergency food distributions to needy residents of Columbia County. Seven hundred low-income families receive assistance through this program. People are so appreciative. And they are full of questions about life at the university. It's great to know that county residents care about us at least as much as we care about them.

Peiffer: Do certain volunteer initiatives enjoy broad-based support across the entire campus?

Michelle Rowland (Sophomore from Columbia Crossroads): The new campus chapter of Amnesty International, organized in cooperation with the Volunteer Office, draws support from the entire campus: Residence halls, Greek organizations, service clubs, individual students.

Peiffer: Tell me about Amnesty.

Rowland. Amnesty International is a worldwide, human rights organization working for the release of prisoners of conscience who have neither used nor advocated the use of violence.

Peiffer: Prisoners of conscience?

Rowland Yes. Men, women, sometimes even children arrested for their beliefs or imprisoned because of their gender or national origin. Our students meet each month to write letters in their behalf, appealing to governments to treat such prisoners fairly and responsibly. In the process, we learn a great deal about the hard realities of the world in which we live.

Peiffer: Community service at Bloomsburg University is conducted in partnership with Pennsylvania Campus Compact. How has that partnership enhanced local efforts to encourage voluntarism?

Lisa Markel (Senior from New Cumberland): The Compact, of which Bloomsburg is a charter member, exists to promote volunteer community service on university campuses. We derive great benefit from our participation in the Compact. Campus Compact, for example, currently is funding a collaborative project involving students from Bloomsburg, Wilkes University, King's College, Penn State/Wilkes-Barre, and Luzerne County Community College. The goal of the project is to maintain a regional student housing coalition which addresses issues of homelessness and poverty housing in our area.

Together with students from other universities, we're changing our world. And that's exciting!

Volunteer Services receives grant to form coalition

A collaborative effort between Bloomsburg and Wilkes universities volunteer services organizations has resulted in a one-year $6,400 grant from Pennsylvania Campus Compact, a program of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities. The grant will be used toward forming a collegiate coalition to address the homeless issues in the region, according to Robert Peiffer, coordinator of volunteer services at BU.

BU and Wilkes have invited King's College, Luzerne County Community College and the Pennsylvania State University/Wilkes-Barre campus to join in forming an intercampus poverty housing network that will work to create affordable housing opportunities and provide for home repair service to aid the elderly, Peiffer said.

The network will work cooperatively with local affiliates of Habitat for Humanity and the Commission on Economic Opportunity to create public awareness of substandard housing conditions in the region (Columbia and Luzerne counties) as well as to provide the technical and physical assistance to improve local housing. Of the five schools, BU is the only one that has a housing chapter, said Peiffer.

Goals of the program include creating a student advisory board with representatives from each campus to develop a sustained and coordinated effort for addressing regional housing issues; fostering relationships among students from the five campuses; raising public awareness through educational programming; and providing students with the experience of working with community-based service networks.

"One of our aims is to provide students with experiences that help them understand the power of a combined effort," said Peiffer.

she says. "If our tutors can work with these students, they can walk away knowing they learned skills to apply to a broader teaching environment."

Not all of the tutors are education majors. "Some of our volunteers just have a real passion for their subject matter, and they want to share their enthusiasm," says Kramer. University tutors, though moving out of their teenage years, still have "a fresh memory of those years" are are able to relate well to the middle school students, she says.

Such partnerships have produced successful "tutoring teams" such as Amy Zdonski, a freshman secondary education major from Dickson City, and a Berwick eighth grader who has gone from "basically failing math and science" to achieving her goal grade of 85 in the first marking period.

"Before Amy came, I didn't really care, but once I started getting better grades, I knew I could pass," says the eighth grader.

"Students here don't look down on the fact that you have a tutor, they appreciate it," says Zdonski. "It's pretty cool to have a tutor."

Focus on study habits has helped improve grades for Dale Adams, a 14-year-old seventh grader now in his second semester of tutoring. His current tutor is Jennifer Loughlin, a senior secondary education major from Nanuet, N.Y., and president of social sorority Chi Theta Pi. Loughlin met Kramer at a BU student activities fair and invited her to speak at the sorority house. Fifteen of the 41 members of the sorority became Project RETAIN volunteers.

"Her enthusiasm for the program is what made a lot of people get involved," says Loughlin. "She really cares about the tutors and the students."

Students and tutors care about each other, points out senior Trieste Shafer. "You know that student is relying on you, that he expects you to be there to help," she explains. "Even if we just spend the time working on homework, he'll know he can walk into class feeling prepared."

other officials believe the SHARE program can benefit these youths. "These are kids who are having some problems in school because they simply don't like to be there," she said.

"What we're trying to do through the SHARE program is to get the kids to drop all the labels, like 'tough guy' or 'Mr. Cool,' and teach them that it's okay to work together with the other kids. We want them to learn that it's okay to be themselves . . . without all the labels."

The youths had the option whether or not to participate in the program, said Davis, but she hopes that more of them will join their classmates in SHARE sometime soon. "A lot of them didn't sign up because they felt their classmates would call them stupid," Davis said. "But after this program gets rolling, we think kids will want to come out."

Addition will nearly double size of Kehr Union

An $8.7 million renovation and addition to the Marguerite W. Kehr Union building has been approved by the board of governors of the State System of Higher Education. Funds for the project were previously approved by BU students in a vote taken in September 1989. The referendum increases student union fees by $50 per semester — from $10 to $60 — beginning next fall.

According to BU's Donald McCulloch, director of physical plant and energy management, final blueprints of the project will not be completed until January. "The architects are now in the process of finalizing the plans," said the Kehr Union project manager. "By the first of the year, we'll have all the specification documents ready to go out for bid."

Plans call for a complete shutdown of the present facility for a period of 15 months to renovate and expand the union. "This project will double the size of the existing building," he said, indicating that expansion will add nearly 41,000 square feet of space to the current 43,000 square feet. "The new union building will be about the size of McCormick Human Services Center," he said.

McCulloch said expansion will provide room for "several additions" to the union. "There will be a 20-foot ceiling multi-purpose room suitable for showing movies and holding other activities that currently must be scheduled for Carver or Mitrani auditoriums." Other improvements include an enlarged snack bar area, a large lounge with a fireplace, a computer lab for students, and a fire protection or sprinkler system. In addition, he said, the Health Center and Career Development Center will be relocated inside the union, and six more conference rooms will also be added to the new facility.

Named in honor of the late Marguerite W. Kehr, who served the institution as dean of women from 1928 to 1953, Kehr Union opened in 1973. The facility houses two formal lounges and multi-purpose rooms, a snack bar and dining area, a game room, a television room, an automatic bank teller machine, a mailroom with mailboxes for commuter students, an information center, offices for student and community activities' organizations, and more.

The university is working to provide alternative locations for the services offered in Kehr Union during the renovation period, McCulloch said. "We're renovating the back of the University Store now . . . preparing it as a snack bar and student function area," he said.

"I think all the bases have been covered in terms of pre-planning that we've had to do to make this thing work."

Construction on the 17-year-old union building will begin following graduation next spring. "We expect to have the union back in service for the fall semester of 1992," he said.

DEGREE CANDIDATE — Debra Sanders, a respiratory clinician at Geisinger Medical Center, is nearly finished with requirements for a master's degree in nursing at BU, now accredited by the NLN*

M.S. degree in nursing program accredited by National League

Accredited by the National League for Nursing (NLN) in March, 1990, the master of science degree in nursing (MSN) program at Bloomsburg University concentrates its efforts on preparing students for advanced clinical nursing practice.

According to M. Christine Alichnie, coordinator of the graduate nursing program, BU's master's curriculum specializes in three advanced clinical nursing areas.

"Our advanced clinical nursing practice specialties include adult health and illness, community health, and psychiatric mental health," said Alichnie.

"The beauty of our program is that it's based on adult learners' needs to enhance their personal and professional goals, and graduates of the program can choose from a variety of clinical and educational opportunities," Alichnie indicated.

Career possibilities include advanced clinical practice at any number of hospitals or other healthcare settings (medical centers, agencies, public health departments, etc.), working as a nursing administrator, teaching at the undergraduate level, collaboratively practicing with physicians and even establishing an individual practice," she said.

"Clinical placement is provided at local, regional and national healthcare facilities and is always done on an individual basis," Alichnie said, adding that Hershey Medical Center, Columbia-Montour Home Health Agency, Williamsport Hospital, Polyclinic Medical Center in Harrisburg, Presbyterian University Medical Center and Hahnemann Medical Center in Philadelphia, and the National Institution of Health in Bethesda, Maryland, are among the major facilities used for clinical practicums in BU's MSN program.

The MSN program was started at BU in 1984. In less than six years, nursing administrators at the university received official notification of the program's accreditation by the National League for Nursing on March 14 of this year, making it the first nursing master's degree curriculum in northeastern Pennsylvania and within Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education.

"We are very proud of this accomplishment," Alichnie said. "Our graduate faculty worked many long hours to complete the accreditation body's required self-study report.

"Accreditation from the National League shows that our program has met rigorous, high-quality standards, and students would rather enroll in an NLN-accredited program than one that isn't, due to career opportunities."

She said the MSN program at BU benefits both full-time and part-time graduate nursing students and indicated that financial assistance is available to those who qualify. "Our curriculum programming is geared for adult learners to succeed," said Alichnie. "We can also award financial support in relation to graduate assistantships and federal monies from advanced nursing traineeship grants."

The cost of the program, however, is quite reasonable — $121 per credit hour — in comparison to other graduate schools throughout the state, she added.

To qualify for admission, an individual must be a registered nurse licensed in Pennsylvania with an earned bachelor of science degree in nursing. Additionally, the Graduate Record Examination and a minimum of one year in practice as an R.N. are required for full admission status.

For more information, call Alichnie at (717) 389-4600 or the nursing department at (717) 389-4423.

BU approves faculty exchange pact with Chinese college

A four-year agreement has been signed by President Harry Ausprich and China's Shenyang College of Economics and Finance to initiate a faculty exchange program beginning in January 1991.

Each year of the agreement, BU will accept two Shenyang faculty members as graduate students in the College of Business' Master of Business Administration program. The program will enable two visiting scholars from China to pursue the MBA degree at BU. They will also work up to 10 hours a week assisting College of Business faculty.

In exchange, two College of Business faculty members will teach in their field of expertise and conduct research for six weeks during the summer.

In a letter to President Pei Feng of Shenyang College, Ausprich wrote, "I sincerely hope this agreement marks the beginning of a wonderful relationship . . . characterized by cooperation and goodwill between our two fine institutions."

Carol Matteson, dean of the College of Business, believes the agreement will benefit faculty at both institutions. "This agreement provides a tremendous opportunity for Shenyang faculty to study in our MBA program," she says. "In exchange, our faculty will have a chance to teach and conduct research in another country. Faculty from both schools can exchange books, scholarly papers, periodicals and other research materials."

The contract evolves from a 1988 discussion between BU's Ruhul Amin, associate professor of marketing and management, and leaders of China's Liaoning Province during an economic conference he attended in China. Liaoning Province, an economically developed area, includes Shenyang, the country's fourth largest city.

According to Amin, who directs BU's Institute for Comparative and International Studies (ICIMS), Fortune 500 leaders and representatives of six American universities were invited by Chinese officials to attend a "top-level" conference two years ago in an effort to discuss the opening of American businesses and industries there.

"We met with the governors of China's 22 provinces," said Amin. "University representatives were business experts invited to examine China's economic system and serve as economic advisers to their leaders."

Amin says he took this opportunity to "check into some joint ventures" between the Chinese and Bloomsburg University. "I talked to governors in six provinces and all of them expressed interest in an exchange program with us. Liaoning was the province we felt could provide us with the best opportunity."

Discussions Amin had with Ma De Po, director of open policy in Liaoning Province, initiated the ties between BU and the school in Shenyang. "China is moving more and more to an 'open' market economy, and they're looking to us for help," he said.

BU anthropologist, students do field work in Central Ohio

Dee Anne Wymer's affiliation with a national research team gave the Bloomsburg anthropology professor the opportunity to involve 12 of her students in field work for six weeks this past summer.

Working with the Murphy Archaeological Research Group, they conducted excavations at the Munson Spring site in the Raccoon Creek valley of Newark, Ohio. Wymer and her students examined undisturbed cultural deposits from the first verified human occupation of the North American continent around 11,500 years ago, as well as occupation layers from all subsequent cultural periods. These layers produce a unique picture of the human endeavor in the region from past to present, says Wymer.

Wymer

The MARG research team composed of several scientists from various institutions has been working at the site for the past seven years. Wymer has been with MARG since 1987 and was funded by a $1,000 University Foundation Margin of Excellence grant.

The field excavations of last summer revealed what appears to be an Odene Indian burial mound, dated to 700 B.C., that includes Hopewell Indian deposits dated to the year 200. The burial mound tells something about the use of the land, how the mound was constructed, where the group lived during the building of the mound, and how the area was used by people nearly 1,000 years after the mound was built. They uncovered interesting patterns of fire-cracked rock, with broken pottery, spear points and other stone tools.

Wymer notes this burial mound is unique for two reasons. First, the mound contains several burial layers from cultures of different time periods. Normally, different cultures make distinct burial mounds; they do not add to another culture's mound. Second, the mound's location is in a protected hollow rather than in a prominent location such as a bluff overlooking a river.

The Bloomsburg field school students also had the opportunity to work with an intact mastodon skeleton which was recovered from a prehistoric bog (shallow lake) this past December by MARG. The mastodon is an early primitive elephant that died out 10,000 years ago when the Ice Age ended. This particular mastodon has been dated to 11,000 years ago, and there are suggestions of butchering cut marks on some of its rib bones by Paleoindians. It is believed that the meat was purposefully placed in the glacial lake to preserve it.

"There is no doubt that the discovery of the mound and the mastodon bog are what give the undisturbed Munson Spring Site its significance," says Wymer. Even so, "all sites are significant because they tell us about the past and are nonrenewable resources," she asserts.

As a result of Wymer's membership in MARG, a group on the "cutting edge" of the field, and her 1990 field research experiences, she is able to give her students the "newest" and "hottest" discoveries in archaeology.

Wymer will present a paper on her 1990 findings to the Eastern States Archaeological Federation. In addition, her research findings have been published in the Ohio Academy of Sciences, and she will have numerous publications coming out in edited volumes. The research group has also submitted a paper on the mastodon to Nature.

BU leases park facility near Eagles Mere Bloomsburg University has leased Keystone Mountain Park, an 85-acre park near Eagles Mere, for one year. Signing of the agreement with Natalia Parris took place on August 24.

The park encompasses nearly 85 acres of rolling countryside that includes a one and a half acre lake, three residence buildings which can furnish housing for up to 25 people, and three other facilities that can be used for group performances or meetings.

Robert Parrish, vice president for administration, said the university intends to use the property primarily as a field station for its ecological science programs. But, he added, other academically related activities can also be scheduled at the park.

"Use of the facility will be limited to instructional activities, faculty research and development, planning sessions for academic or administrative departments, and class field trips," Parrish said.

'Alcohol Awareness Week' initiates year-long emphasis

Student organizations at BU recognized "Alcohol Awareness Week" with activities coinciding with National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, October 14-20.

"Alcohol Awareness Week" initiates a year-round emphasis on alcohol education and recognition of the individual's ultimate responsibility for decisions regarding use or non-use of alcohol," said President Harry Ausprich.

The activities included films, lectures, discussions and non-alcoholic refreshments.

Exercise physiologist administers fitness tests on U.S. Olympians

Getting a chance to work with Olympic athletes recently in Lake Placid, N.Y., gave Linda LeMura, assistant professor of health, physical education and athletics, an opportunity to engage in new and exciting research.

"Any exercise physiologist would jump at the chance to work with such an elite group of athletes," she says.

LeMura, whose training and research is in the area of cardiac disease rehabilitation, was part of a five-member team of exercise physiologists that spent four days, October 24-27, at the Olympic Training Center in Lake Placid — the site of the 1932 and 1980 Wi[illegible]lympic Games — to administer fitness tests on a dozen U.S. Olympic biathlon hopefuls.

"I've never seen anything like it," she exclaimed. "These athletes are so highly trained . . . they are true world-class competitors."

LeMura was selected to the team of exercise physiologists by her mentor, Dave Bacharach of St. Cloud University in Minnesota. Bacharach, who served as director for this project, was LeMura's doctoral dissertation adviser at Syracuse University.

"I first became involved with this project through a colleague of mine," Bacharach said. "Glen Street, formerly of Penn State University and now a member of our staff at St. Cloud, developed the initial relationship with the U.S. Olympic Committee based upon some of his research with biathletes." Bacharach and Street collaborated with the Olympic Committee to develop the biathlon training program," he said.

LeMura

The biathlon is a 10-kilometer event that consists of cross-country skiing and rifle sharpshooting. According to LeMura, the reason for testing the athletes was to determine their physiological responses to simulated racing conditions. "Our job was to help the athletes improve their competitive edge in world-class competition."

The team of exercise physiologists conducted three examinations on the biathletes — a Ski-Pole Power Output Test, a Field Test, and a Single-Pole Ski Walk Test.

The first test simulates an "arm pulling" motion in cross-country skiing. Its purpose is to assess an athlete's ability to generate power in the upper body. "Since a large portion of cross-country skiing — especially uphill skiing — requires tremendous upper body strength," explained LeMura, "it was necesary to test the athletes' endurance levels using this test."

She helped conduct the Field Test during the athletes' routine training on the biathlon course. "This test monitors lactate responses during the course of a simulated race," LeMura said. She defined lactate as a chemical by-product of metabolism. Its presence in the blood is highly related to pain and fatigue, she said. A higher level of lactate in the athletes' blood will lead to a higher degree of fatigue.

"It's necessary to identify the point that triggers an athlete's lactate threshold if we're to provide training recommendations to lengthen that threshold," she said. "In other words, by training at or near the lactate threshold, an athlete's ability to tolerate fatigue during racing conditions will increase."

In the third test — Single Pole Ski Walk Test — the team of exercise physiologists attached an ergometer to a treadmill that simulated the arm motions a cross-country skier must make. "This test, simulating the 'pull' motion of cross-country skiing," LeMura said, "identifies the athletes' endurance capacity. Biathlon competitors need a high degree of cardiovascular conditioning."

Facilities at the Olympic Training Center gave the exercise physiologists an opportunity to provide immediate feedback about training recommendations using state-of-the-art equipment. "Each athlete could incorporate our recommendations immediately into their daily routines," LeMura said. "The unique thing was that we were able to plot data as soon as we collected it. We then could meet with each athlete to explain the results, and recommend specific training modifications."

For LeMura, the most compelling part of the work as seeing the athletes' commitment to training. "I gained a lot of appreciation for the commitment these athletes make, and their intensity toward training," she said.

LeMura and the other exercise physiologists reunited in December at the Olympic Training Center to continue testing the biathletes, and possibly some other Olympians. "We'll go back to perform the tests again to see if there is a difference in the athletes' performance based on the recommendations we made," she said.

MBA students write business plan for local entrepreneur

Many college students believe the formula for obtaining a higher education is a rather simple one — attend classes, take lots of notes, study hard, pass the examinations. But after completing an intensive three-month research project for a local small business, graduate student Claire Peltier says the classroom is only the beginning phase of the learning process.

"I learned a lot throughout this project," said Peltier, an exchange student from France enrolled in the MBA program at Bloomsburg University. "I realize now just how difficult it is to start a business."

Peltier and fellow MBA students Bradley Rarig and Michele Triponey of Bloomsburg, Susan Rowland of Schnecksville, and Wendy Yarbrough of Akron (Pa.), worked diligently from June to August preparing a consultant's report on a product designed by Leo J. Yodock, founder and chief executive officer of ROSE Enterprises, Inc., in Bloomsburg.

The students' assignment was to prepare an in-depth business plan for ROSE's Yodock Barrier System — a hollow barrier made of durable plastic that, when filled with water, provides a less expensive alternative to the concrete barriers used at highway construction sites. Yodock defines it as a "lightweight shell that can be installed for any number of different uses . . . on land or underwater." ROSE is endeavoring to promote the barrier to Pennsylvania's Department of Transportation. The company will eventually look into the feasibility of marketing the product nationally and worldwide," he said.

Under the supervision of Professor Melvyn L. Woodward, director of BU's Small Business Institute, a component of the university's MBA program, Peltier coordinated the project while the other group members were responsible for coming up with the manufacturing, financing and marketing segments of the report.

According to Yodock, the students' report is helping ROSE (an acronym for Research on Safety Equipment) in the tedious processes of manufacturing, financing and marketing the new product. "I was thrilled," Yodock said of the students' work. "The exercise was a good one for the students . . . and the university should be very proud of them."

Woodward, who teaches marketing and management in BU's College of Business, said the ROSE project presented his graduate students with an opportunity to "accelerate their maturation" and gain some professional experience. "This project gave them exposure to what goes on at the professional level," he said.

Although pleased with his students' performance, Woodward gives credit to Yodock for "taking a gamble" on the university's Small Business Institute. "We're able to do a project like this because there are men like Joe Yodock who are willing to take a gamble on us," he said. "Without a client who is willing to devote substantial amounts of time, we couldn't do projects like this."

Woodward said the "Joe Yodocks of the world" essentially become members of the faculty during these projects because they know their company's specific needs. "They certainly take on a huge amount of the instructional load," he said. "I can't answer all of the questions the students' have about a problem that a particular business has."

Yodock said he would not hesitate to call on Woodward and his graduate students again. "I'm impressed with the work done by those students . . . and with the quality of the Small Business Institute program at Bloomsburg University," he said.

Candlelight vigil for children shows concern of BU community

BU students and alumni participated in a candlelight vigil to show support for the World Summit for Children, held at the United Nations September 29 and 30. Held in conjunction with the vesper service on the opening Sunday of the Bloomsburg Fair, the vigil portion of the program was coordinated by the university's Volunteer Services Office.

Bob Peiffer, Protestant campus minister and coordinator of student volunteer services at BU, estimated that 1,000 area residents attended the vespers and vigil.

Joining in similar vigils at sundown on September 23 were hundreds of thousands of people in 75 countries around the world. The summit, which focused on the rights of children, was attended by heads of state and other world government leaders, including President Bush of the United States and Mikhail Gorbachev of the Soviet Union.

"When we learned of the vigil," said Peiffer, "we approached the Bloomsburg Area Ministerium about doing an observance of the summit, and they agreed." The Ministerium sponsors the annual vespers program.

Among those participating in the program were George Hemingway, mayor of Bloomsburg; Ted Stuhan, state representative; Barbara Lombardo, coordinator of volunteer services for the Bloomsburg Area School District, Joan Mosier, director of Columbia County Children and Youth Services; Dor Sachetti, of the La Leche League; John Walker, vice president for university advancement at BU; Joel Tolbert, president of the Community Government Association; and Lisa Markel, president of the Husky Ambassadors.

Corporate Institute teaches team-building, communications

The Corporate Institute offers professional development seminars, primarily in the area of team-building and communications. These seminars have been very well received by a number of corporations, including Air Products and Chemicals, DuPont, Leadership Wilkes-Barre and the Delta Development Corporation of Harrisburg.

Ray Smith, director of the Corporate Institute, and his staff also provide professional development services to non-profit organizations. In early October, they conducted a teambuilding seminar for the president's cabinet, deans and other university managers.

Smith

Smith invites alumni who are involved in professional development as managers and trainers to contact him for more information. In addition, there are probably many other alumni who have friends and colleagues associated with organizations, especially in the area of human resources — profit and non-profit — who might like to learn of the Corporate Institute and Professional Development training. Smith's telephone number is 717-389-2100.

Some comments from past participants:

"We are a different organization as a result of the work you have done with us." — CEO Austin Cable Vision, Texas

Betances stresses beauty of cultural diversity on campus

Higher education can play a significant role in fostering cultural diversity throughout the United States if colleges and universities can "empower students with the right scripts," says renowned lecturer and educator Samuel Betances.

Betances

Betances, a sociology professor at Northeastern Illinois University in Chicago for the past 18 years, spoke at the first of three Provost's Lecture Series scheduled at BU this fall. The ethnic diversity specialist has been a key figure in the battle for bilingual education and better racial relations in the United States.

Before an audience of nearly 400 members of the university community, Betances said American educators and business leaders alike are realizing a need to develop better teaching and training methods to prepare minority and lower class individuals for the nation's workforce in the 21st century.

"We don't have the experiences and skills to teach lower class individuals how to succeed," Betances said. "We bring people in (to schools and businesses), and we fail them for not knowing what we can't teach them."

Betances said the chief responsibility for the modern university is that it "realizes it must universalize the human spirit." He added, "For the first time, we have to educate everybody."

Relating a story from his youth about a nurse who "parented" him on the right path in life, Betances said, "We need, in the universities, to get 'parental' with each other . . . the world requires that we work together and collectively."

As a young person growing up in Puerto Rico, Betances admitted he had difficulty learning the English language, and called for American educators to realize that teaching English, especially to new U.S. citizens, is essential to their being successful in life.

"Anybody who thinks that you can get by in the United States without learning English is a fool," the Harvard graduate said. "English is the language that binds U.S. citizens to each other . . . we must teach English to newcomers to this country."

But, he said, newcomers to the United States should not forget the language of their heritage.

"If we're going to universalize this country, we must make future Americans better prepared for the workforce in the year 2000 . . . and have them learn two languages, not just one."

Betances said he blames the media and other "image makers" in this country for creating delusions about how Americans are supposed to live their lives. "We are made to feel ashamed of the way God made us," he said. "Society is relentlessly telling us that we're not good enough."

To illustrate his point, Betances reflected back on radio and television programs of the 1950s and 1960s that cast minorities and lower class individuals as being unintelligent. "As a kid, the only time we saw black people on the media was 'Amos and Andy,'" he said. That radio show, which later became a popular television program, remained on the air for a long time despite its opposition from Black Americans. He said the media's argument was that "Amos and Andy" was comedy and shouldn't be taken too seriously.

"But," he said, "if white people only had Pee Wee Herman . . . you'd be upset too."

Betances criticized media reports and other statistics suggesting that the minority dropout rate in our colleges and universities is high. "The dropout rate has never been lower at any time in our history," he said. Most immigrants to this country took three or four generations — or about 90 years — to produce college graduates in their families," he added.

"Due to slavery and other setbacks, it's taken about 10 generations for Black Americans," he said.

In closing, Betances offered educators a challenge: "In the 21st century, we've got to have people with information to teach lower class persons how to prepare for learning. We must work together!"

Nespoli grand marshal of Homecoming parade

Local jeweler and entrepreneur Joseph M. Nespoli of Berwick served as grand marshal for the Homecoming parade on Saturday, October 27.

Appointed by Gov. Robert P. Casey in April 1989 to serve a three-year term on the State System of Higher Education's board of governors, Nespoli was a member of BU's Council of Trustees from 1971 to 1983.

The owner of Nespoli Jewelers in Berwick serves as secretary of the institution's foundation board. He is a member of community organizations including the Berwick Industrial Development Board, Berwick Chamber of Business and Industry, and Berwick Rotary.

Nespoli served in the U.S. Marine Corps in the Pacific during World War II. After receiving an honorable discharge, he learned the jewelry trade at the Bowman Institute of Philadelphia.

Nespoli, a 1935 graduate of Berwick High School, resides in Berwick with his wife, Kay. They have four children — Joseph, Larry, John and Kathy.

Computer Office staff enhances development, alumni software

Members of BU's computer staff recently completed the enhancement of the software system used by the Development Office and Alumni Affairs Office. The need for an improved system became imperative when the Trust for Generations campaign was launched in 1989.

"The new features are a great asset to staff members responsible for tracking the many details associated with a five-year campaign," said Anthony Iannero, assistant vice president fordevelopment. "Everyone in the Development Office and the Alumni Office has eagerly awaited these changes," he added.

A reduction in the amount of time needed to update individual donor records and the ability to generate reportsat one's fingertips are two major improvements.

Jim Gessner spearheaded the 15-month project and was assisted by programmers Bob Burns, Barb Dietterick, Gene Chesney and Clyde Bailey. Other computer center personnel involved were Doyle Dodson '57, director of computer services; Glenn Bieber '71, manager of administrative systems; and Mark Raynes '80, data base administrator.

The original alumni data base system was developed in the early 1980s to maintain only alumni information. Development Office initiatives, underway by 1986, soon demanded more than the system could supply. In 1989, the BU Computer Services Department was authorized to improve the existing system and to design a new fund-raising module.

The enhanced system permits personalized letters, on-line monitoring of campaign/appeal progress, storage/retrieval of more complete information about alumni and friends, generation of reports and letters by the clerical staff rather than the computer center, and an improved pledge/payment accounting format.

Unique burial pattern part of prof's South American research

(Editor's Note: The following article about Thomas Aleto, Ph.D., assistant professor of anthropology, was written by Paula Miller, student writer in the Office of University Relations.)

For Tom Aleto, Bloomsburg anthropology professor, discoveries of a unique burial pattern not known for any other contemporary culture, and a very elaborate Inca burial were the most significant part of the research he conducted for 10 weeks last summer in South America.

During his trip, he examined patterns of artifact distribution at the Ceibo Grande site on La Puna, a large island off the southern coast of Equador. His archaeological investigation was funded by a $3,500 State System of Higher Education faculty development grant.

Aleto first became aware of Ceibo Grande in 1983 when conducting his doctoral research in Bellavista, a small hamlet several miles south of the site. In June 1989, he returned to the Ceibo Grande to investigate how the Punae culture changed in response to contact with Europeans. La Puna was inhabited at the time of the Spanish conquest by people of the Punae culture. The Punae were one of the most important political and economic chiefdoms in Pacific South America.

Different types of artifacts tend to be closely correlated with general patterns of behavior, economic activity, social status, and political organization. Artifacts on the landscape provide one of the main sources of information for reconstructing the Punae culture, says Aleto.

A copy of Aleto's raw research data is on file at the Ecuadorian National Institute of Cultural Patrimony, the equivalent of some division of the U.S. State Department, he notes. The NICP requires submittal of a major research report before any research projects are granted.

Aleto will use his 1990 field research experiences in his Prehistoric Archaeology course to discuss methodological approaches and to give rise to specific examples to illustrate a particular archaeological point. He would also like to offer a new course, South American archaeology, in which his experiences at Ceibo Grande would be of great value.

Aleto will present a paper on his 1990 findings in April 1991 at the Society for American Archaeology conference in New Orleans. In addition, he will be submitting a paper to the Miscelanea Anthropologica Ecuatoriana, an Ecuadorian journal. In the future, he will also submit his paper to a number of American journals such as American Antiquity.

(In October, Aleto was one of two faculty speakers at the first Alumni Breakfast Lecture, sponsored by the Alumni Association.)

Speaker describes tough decisions faced by gays, lesbians every day

By GWENN EVANS WELLS

Deciding to tell the truth or lie about their homosexuality is a reality gays and lesbians must face many times a day, said Jaime Grant, director of development for the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, during a recent lecture on campus attended by nearly 100 people.

Referring to a lover as a roommate or a friend is a common reaction in a society where "homophobia is pervasive," Grant said. The discomfort that inevitably follows in gay/straight relationships is not about homosexuality but rather an irrational hatred or fear of homosexuals, she stressed.

Grant

Speaking on the topic, "Coming Out — A Gay Straight Talk," the former development staff member for Bucknell University and volunteer for the Bloomsburg Women's Center, encouraged her audience to "take the initiative" and educate themselves about gays and lesbians.

"Read appropriate literature and talk to heterosexuals who have gay friends," she said, applauding lesbian and gay support groups that provide opportunities for counseling, such as BU's "Free Spirit."

Gays who "come out" to heterosexual friends want and need "some very concrete and simple things in return," she told her audience. "Questions are good. Healthy, curious questions address the many often neglected dimensions of lesbianism, such as emotional needs and feelings.

"Being a lesbian doesn't just affect a teeny, weeny part of my life, it affects how I live my whole life," she said.

Breaking the news of her sexual preference to her mother was the most difficult thing she's ever done, said Grant. Now she's preparing herself mentally to explain her sexual preference to the child she is planning to have. Though homosexual parenting may be controversial among heterosexuals, women in gay and lesbian communities have been mothering families for centuries, she said.

Grant, who said she plans to have a child with a close male friend who is gay, noted, "My child will raised to make his or her own choices about sexuality." She urged her audience to apply the same tolerance.

The lecture was sponsored by the Campus-Wide Commission on Human Relations.

Science fiction novelist finds few 'realistic' female characters

Since modern science fiction literature became popular in this country back in the 1930s, male authors have wrongly portrayed women in their stories, says science fiction and fantasy author-editor Anne Devereaux Jordan.

Jordan, who wrote The Seventh-Day Adventists: A History and The Baptists, spoke on "Women in Science Fiction: The Brass Brassiere" to an audience of more than 100 BU faculty, staff and students in November. Her appearance was sponsored by BU's Arts and Sciences Honors Program.

"Mainstream science fiction literature has traditionally been puritanical and male oriented," Jordan said. She indicated that 99 percent of the writers, editors and readers of science fiction were male back in the early days of the literature. Although that percentage has been on the decline in recent years, males still make up more than 60 percent of the total science fiction readership.

"Science fiction has been written by men who have produced few important or realistic female protagonists," she added.

Jordan said the woman's role in science fiction has been that of comforter, victim or sadistic amazon, "complete with brass brassiere as in Conan (the Barbarian) stories," or the girl next door. "The woman was seldom an adult, literally or figuratively," she said. "Too often she was portrayed as a sort of sexual nitwit and a prize for the hero when his outer space trials and tribulations were over."

Jordan

According to Jordan, the lack of significant, serious women characters in science fiction literature is due in part to its traditional audience. "Science fiction deals, no matter how slightly, with science . . . a discipline traditionally associated with men," she said, adding that male writers have argued for years that the "instinctual, natural, emotional and purely physical characteristics that are stereotypically associated with women distract from the organized, intellectual and orderly progress of science."

To illustrate the belief of her male counterparts, Jordan paraphrased their argument: "They believe you can't have a scientific experiment if, according to the female stereotype, the scientist suddenly becomes hysterical and throws his test tubes on the floor in a temper tantrum. This is how they portray most women."

But things began to change in the late 1960s and early 1970s. "The feminist movement resulted in a greater awareness on the part of both the readers and the writers," Jordan said. "While the buxom beauty in distress and the amazon still dominate in many cases, more and more writers, male as well as females, are now creating well-rounded, realistic and believable women characters in their stories."

Jordan said the change has been bolstered by the fact that, in the last 20 years, the number of female science fiction editors has grown significantly. "What has emerged is a literature that goes where no man has dared to go," she said.

Jordan admits that the "fight is still going on," but women science fiction writers are now getting the credibility they deserve. "Feminism in science fiction is good writing," she said.

Ausprich elected vice chairperson of state Humanities Council

President Harry Ausprich has been elected vice chairperson of the Pennsylvania Humanities Council. Within two years, he will assume the position of chairperson. He was appointed to the council by Gov. Robert P. Casey.

Ausprich served on the Ohio Humanities Council during his years as dean of the College of Fine and Professional Arts at Kent State University, and on the Iowa Humanities Council as dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts at the University of Northern Iowa.

In Pennsylvania, the council is a private, nonprofit organization consisting of 31 members. Their goal is to enhance the meaning and value of life by creating a "public dialogue" to involve history, philosophy, literature and related academic subjects. The organization is affiliated with the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Fitness expert prescribes progressive strength training

By GWENN EVANS WELLS

To prevent chronic disorders such as coronary artery disease and juvenile diabetes, exercise expert David Costill prescribes progressive strength training to help individuals feel stronger as they get older.

Progressive strength training, a form of resistance training that incorporates the use of weights in physical activity, "probably has a much greater impact than aging on endurance levels," Costill told the audience as the second speaker in the Provost's Lecture Series at BU. Costill is professor of exercise science at Ball State University.

The gradual decline of strength capacity, he warned, may have a "dramatic bearing on how well an individual can do normal activities." This decline in strength is one reason that elderly people often have difficulty maintaining their balance and coordination, he added.

A former long distance runner who switched to swimming in college, Costill noted that humans experience a decline in aerobic activities when they get older. Inactivity, he said, leads to changes in an individual's performance, a loss of muscle fiber, and an increase in body fat.

Costill

"Even people who look as though they haven't changed a great deal with age exhibit a tremendous increase in body fat composition and an enormous decrease in muscle mass" because of a loss of motor neurons that help stimulate their muscles, he explained.

"But if individuals continue to be physically active, those changes don't necessarily have to happen," Costill said. Strength training which "can help them maintain their strength and, to a smaller degree, their muscle mass," can produce "a big impact" on an elderly person's ability to cope with daily needs. "Even 90-year-olds can double their strength, and possibly their endurance, with progressive strength training programs," he said.

In addition to strength training, Costill suggests other endurance-building activities, such as walking and running, to help elderly individuals maintain their quality of life. "You don't have to do it every day," he said. "Three or four times a week will help retain most of the things we're trying to resist losing as we age."

Costill, who recently co-authored the book, Training for Sport and Activity with Jack Wilmore of the University of Texas, is also co-editor-in-chief of the "International Journal of Sports Medicine." He is former president of the American College of Sports Medicine.

Many schools prepare minority students for failure, not success

By GWENN EVANS WELLS

Far too many schools prepare black and other minority students for failure rather than success, warns Robert Pipkin, a street-smart educator who spoke on campus recently.

A former high school basketball player, Pipkin graduated near the bottom of his class and went on to become the first principal of a model Pittsburgh middle school, the nationally recognized Prospect 3-M Center for multiracial, multiethnic and multicultural education.

Pipkin

Nearly 300 students and educators filled seats and overflowed into aisles in Hartline Science Center's Kuster Auditorium to hear Pipkin's evening lecture, "Multicultural Education by the Year 2000."

To counteract the dominant white, "Eurocentric" perspective in education, Pipkin urged educators to "make sure your classes reflect a global society. We have to understand it's all right to be different."

In the comprehensive Prospect 3-M program, such attitudes have been critical to fostering higher achievement and curbing discipline problems ranging from racially motivated fights to high suspension rates. Launched in September 1989, the model serves one of the city's ethnically diverse public school populations.

The widespread failure of schools to positively address the needs and abilities of minority children ultimately deprives society of not only cultural understanding but also important resources for the future, said Pipkin.

He emphasized the operational issue is not about racism, but about "economics and opportunity." The percentage of white males in the work force will shrink from 42 percent to 15 percent by the year 2000, he added.

"The business community is keenly aware of the problems facing us today," added Pipkin. He applauded efforts such as a recent $30 million grant from Nabisco to support a multicultural approach to education.

"You can't teach anybody when you don't understand their culture," he admonished.

An informal speaker, Pipkin punctuated his talk with frequent references to magazines such as Ebony and Black Enterprise, as well as books and other media stressing pride in African-American and Hispanic-American accomplishments. A brief newscast video on the Prospect 3-M experience underscored the commitment to common goals among faculty, students, and administrators.

But more action is needed from other fronts including upwardly mobile blacks and hispanics. Many people are far too eager to turn their PHONOTHON TIME— Trust for Generations student workers calling BU alumni and parents this fall from the phonothon facility in Elwell Hall. Approximately 40 students contacted more than 15,000 alumni and parents.

'Trust for Generations' within $500,000 of goal

As of mid-October, the university had received $1,027,000 toward the $1 million goal for Phase I, the Library Fund; $1,243,000 in cash, pledges, and planned gifts toward the $1 million goal for Phase II, the Scholarship Fund, and more than $740,000 toward the $1.5 million goal for Phase III, the Academic Excellence Fund.

"Thanks to thousands of alumni and many university friends, we are now less than $500,000 from completing this first-ever $3.5 million campaign," said Anthony Iannero, assistant vice president for development. "With new pledges occurring as a result of the phonothon this fall, the final goal should be reached by the end of the current semester. This is a wonderful achievement for Bloomsburg. Everyone can be proud," he added.

Each of the totals includes cash donations, pledges and planned gifts. In kind gifts are part of Phase III.

All alumni not contacted last fall for the campaign were called in September and October. "Their response to the Trust Campaign has been wonderful. With their pledges of $300,000, we are $200,000 from the $3.5 million goal," said Susan M. Helwig '82, campaign coordinator.

During this past summer, members of the Class of 1989 were asked to make a three-year pledge commitment to the Library Fund. More than $28,000 was pledged by 250 class members.

backs on racial and cultural heritage, stressed Pipkin. "As a middle class black, I must give something back to my community."

Parent and community involvement in daily structure at Prospect have been "some of the greatest resources" to the 3-M program. "Never talk down to your parents, encourage them," the principal told his audience of current and future educators.

Such advice comes from the man whose colleagues describe him as the "catalyst" in the Pittsburgh 3-M experiment. Based on that success, the district plans to expand the concept to both an elementary and a high school.

Pipkin outlined several creative strategies in use at the center. They include establishing the new position of human relations teacher, reducing homeroom class size to 10 to 15 students to provide an atmosphere for "personalized education," and tailoring texts and curricula to address broader goals.

"Textbooks do not do justice to the contributions of Hispanic-Americans and African-Americans," said Pipkin. He cautioned against popular literature that often includes racial stereotypes and excludes positive minority role models.

"I'm an advocate of total history," he said. "Curriculum development must include everyone.

"We have to find ways to pull youngsters in, to get them involved," said Pipkin, who characterized himself as a "handshaker" in the quest to prompt student interest and self-esteem. "I can hug white students as well as blacks," he continued. "And students understand when you're not real, believe me."

Sincerity is also the key for institutions such as BU that are committed to promoting multicultural educational opportunities," said Pipkin after the session. "There must be a sincere effort to recruit staff, a sincere effort to talk about changes in demographics, not just lip service," said the principal. He urged the university community to help African-American students "feel they're an integral part of Bloomsburg.

"We can't continue to divide. We have so many great resources in this country; we need everyone."

Professor receives award from his native India

TejBhan S. Saini, professor of economics at BU, recently received the "Hind Rattan Award" for outstanding service, excellence in achievement and contributions to his native land.

Saini, a native of Punjab, India, was presented the award by former Indian president Giani Zail Singh at an economic development conference in New Delhi.

"The conference focused on things former Indian residents can do to help the mother country," said Saini, adding that 12 to 16 million native Indians now live outside India. "This award was presented to non-resident Indians from all over the world who are considered to have made outstanding contributions to their homeland."

Saini, who has lived in this country since the early 1950s and has served on the BU faculty for the past 23 years, founded the Eastern Economic Association — an organization of economists throughout Canada and the eastern United States — in 1973. He helped EEA initiate its publication, Eastern Economic Journal, during the same year.

From 1974 to 1976, Saini served on former Governor Milton Shapp's economic advisory committee and received a merit citation for "outstanding service" to the citizens of the Commonwealth.

Two years ago, Saini founded a worldwide association of political economists — Congress of Political Economists (COPE) International — which held its first meeting last January in Hong Kong. COPE International, which publishes the soon-to-be-released Journal of Economic Democracy, will hold its second conference in January in Boston.

In addition, Saini received the State System of Higher Education's distinguished service award in 1974-1975 and 1975-1976, and its distinguished teaching chair award in 1977-1978.

Shock value of art is a fact of life

By GWENN EVANS WELLS

Some individuals will "try to go just about as far as they can to create controversy," such as showing art that is likely to attract censorship, said a visiting artist who feels such controversies may be fanned more by gallery and museum representatives than artists themselves.

"The shock value of art" manifested in sex and violence by some artists and in some institutions that present their work is "part of the reality we face," said Garret J. Boone, an artist in residence at Earlham College in Indiana.

"Just like the negative advertising in this last election campaign, it's a fact of life."

Answering questions following his recent talk on "Art Censorship and Service," sponsored by the BU Art Department in Haas Gallery, Boone shared his thoughts on the recent controversy over the Cincinnati exhibit of sexually explicit photographs by Robert Mapplethorpe.

Boone

As a parent and grandparent, he admitted to being "bothered" by some of the pictures of nude children. But viewing the entire exhibit in context left him "dazzled by the quality of Mapplethorpe's photographs."

He found the collection very relevant to his own paintings and designs which often reflect a fascination with squares. "I learned some things about compositions within squares and the arrangements of squares within installations on walls," he explained. "That wouldn't have been there for me without some of that other stuff," he continued. "I'm willing to accept that."

Boone's projects range from an abbreviated 1963 Volkswagen minivan that created a "very unusual footprint," to a current art and design collaboration in planning public space."

The latter project, funded by the National Endowment for the Arts, targets a 100-acre, three-and-one-half mile long river gorge transecting the city of Richmond, Indiana. The tract is unique not only geologically but also historically as the site of an early music recording studio that captured talents of such music greats as Louis Armstrong and Hoagy Carmichael.

"We want to seize every opportunity to reveal the beauty of the gorge and to share this rich heritage," said Boone. "This is probably the most significant opportunity I'll ever have in my lifetime to contribute to something for the betterment of a place I know."

Visiting historian cites effects of 'white amnesia'

A "massive amnesia on the part of white Americans" has kept the significant contributions of black fighting units during the Civil War from becoming history, a visiting historian told an audience of more than 200 people at Bloomsburg University.

Lycoming College professor Robert Larson, a specialist in the history of warfare, joined BU history professor Walter Howard for a question-and-answer session on the critically acclaimed film "Glory" following one of three screenings in November. Several hundred people attended the discussion session.

Edward Zwick's "Glory" is based on the true story of Col. Robert Gould Shaw, a 25-year-old white Bostonian who commanded the black 54th Massachusetts Regiment. The film portrays Shaw's men from the time the unit was first formed to the July 1863 assault on Fort Wagner outside Charleston (S.C.) Harbor.

Although Shaw's unit failed to capture the fort, the battle and heavy casualties proved that black enlistees were "equal to other Americans," said Larson. "If we forget that today, they will have failed in a much more obscene way than they did on that afternoon."

Larson stressed the importance of remembering history. "'Glory' is a very important film because it provides an opportunity to recover what has been a blank spot in American history," he said. "The film holds special impact for people who develop certain racial stereotypes out of their lack of knowledge."

Questions from the audience focused on a wide variety of topics including military tactics, the meaning of the film's title, points of history and the roots of negative attitudes toward black soldiers by the white population.

"The most we can do is jump into the foray and try to change attitudes," said Howard, a specialist in African-American history. Hopefully the discussion will "stimulate some degree of sophistication" in whites to help them develop an appreciation for black history," he added.

Larson and Howard noted the "extraordinary" historical accuracy in the film, especially the factual accounting of racial prejudice directed at the black soldiers and the spirit they maintained in spite of their struggle. "The struggle of drive, the excitement conveyed and the idealism is the most accurate of all," said Howard.

Engaged in the struggle long before the Fort Wagner battle, the soldiers of the 54th were accorded second-class status in the Union Army. They had to fight for basic supplies, such as uniforms and shoes, as well as for the chance to rise above manual labor to go into battle.

"The test of battle," said Howard, "was a crucial issue to black troops seeking to prove both their manhood and their right to citizenship." Their sacrifices, he noted, helped pave the way for the eventual passage of the 13th and 14th amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

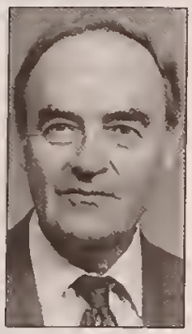
The so-called "Reconstruction Amendments," passed shortly after the Civil War, abolished slavery and formally granted citizenship and voting rights to blacks. But the progress was quickly forgotten and the amendments not fully enforced until prompted by the civil rights movement of the 1960s, now termed by many as "the second Civil War."

Although the contributions of the 54th at Fort Wagner were "very well known" during the days of the Civil War, "they too were lost in time," said Larson. "Black soldiers in World War II had to fight almost as hard as those 54th men. It's a lesson of what happens when you forget history."

State labor secretary sees shift in make-up of workforce

By CHRISTINA GAUDREAU

Within the next 10 years, more than 80 percent of all workers in the United States will be non-whites, immigrants, or women, says Pennsylvania Secretary of Labor and Industry Harris Wofford. And, he says, many will "lack the technical training" required by businesses in the 21st century.



Wofford

Wofford delivered the keynote address during a three-hour teleconference at the Pennsylvania Commission on Women's "Governor's Conference on Responses to Workforce 2000" recently in Carlisle. The conference was co-sponsored by BU's College of Business and Commission on the Status of Women.

Wofford says forecasts indicate there will be a greater proportional increase of women and minorities making up the bulk of the nation's workforce by the year 2000. He added that the nation will also see "an aging workforce that lives and works longer," and that women will be making up nearly half of the total workforce.

"Right now about 60 percent of all new workers are women," Wofford said. "We've only begun to face the implications of this great new fact of economic life."

According to Wofford, two-thirds of the nation's employers are concerned about the lack of reasoning and problem-solving skills demonstrated by their entry-level employees. And, he said, half complain that entry-level workers possess deficiencies in math, writing, and communication skills. Some, too, have an inability to follow simple oral instructions.

In Pennsylvania, employers are "seeking profound guides" in younger worker's skills, abilities, and attitudes, said Wofford. "Businesses today are having a difficult time introducing emerging technologies or expanding existing processes to their employees."

State employers polled in a recent survey said nearly 40 percent of their job applicants were unqualified for work with their companies," he added.

Noting these concerns, Wofford said the United States needs "to stretch our imaginations now" to the year 2000. He suggests conforming with the three major goals unanimously adopted by the president and the nation's governors:

universal basic education for all citizens of the United States; better schooling and preschooling to help resolve deficiences in math, reading, writing, and other skills; and increased involvement in volunteer programs to demonstrate good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility.

"The need is not universal college education, but for universal basic education in the arts that enable people to be responsible citizens and productive workers," he said.

In closing, Wofford offered this challenge: "We must be more inventive if we're going to do our duty."

Gross scholarships awarded to first four recipients

A $100,000 gift received last year from former student Kenneth Gross has helped Bloomsburg University create a new student scholarship program starting this fall.

According to Anthony Ianiero, assistant vice president for development, the scholarship has been named in Gross' honor and will "live on forever" at the university.

"The Kenneth Gross Scholarship is a perpetual scholarship with an award of $1,000 per academic year," said Ianiero.

"The scholarship is based on financial need and has been designed to assist single parents who are enrolled as full-time, non-traditional students at Bloomsburg University," he added.

Ianiero, who also serves as executive director of the BU Foundation, indicated that the scholarship award is renewable each year as long as the recipient continues attending classes on a full-time basis and remains in "good academic standing" at the university.

Patricia Deibert, coordinator of adult advisement/services, said four adult undergraduate students who enrolled at BU through the School of Extended Programs have been selected as the first recipients of the Kenneth Gross Scholarship.

This year's initial recipients are Kathleen Crocker of Nescopeck, a sophomore majoring in special education; Klyde Ann Deaner of Millville, a sophomore majoring in business education/office administration; Lynn C. Kelchner of Berwick, a junior majoring in special education; and Julie Steffen of Bloomsburg, a sophomore majoring in elementary education.

Gross, 37, was a student at BU during the 1970-1973 academic years. He is the former president and owner of Tri-State Securities Systems — a retail business that sold security alarm systems — which he started with his brother in 1977 in their hometown of Philadelphia.

During the next 11 years, the Grosses opened Tri-State operations throughout the eastern states of Florida, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. They also started businesses in the Atlanta, Baltimore, Memphis and Washington, D.C., metropolitan areas.

Gross gained sole possession of Tri-State from his brother four years ago. He sold the business last September, however, to a company called Security Link.

BU enters alliance with Harrisburg schools

An alliance that will provide urban youths with visits to a rural public higher educational institution and college students with inner-city experiences has been consummated between the Harrisburg City School District and Bloomsburg University.

Under the program, BU students studying urban education will make frequent visits to schools in the district to interact with pupils and teachers. University faculty will conduct professional development workshops for teachers and math and science professors will emphasize the career possibilities that exist in their respective fields to urban elementary and middle school students.

In addition, student-teaching opportunities in Harrisburg for university students will be significantly enhanced, and middle schoolers will get a chance to take a weekend trip to Bloomsburg to experience residential life on campus.

Robert Buehner Jr., a local attorney and BU trustee, says the program's primary aim is to provide urban experiences for university students while enhancing growth opportunities for Harrisburg's inner-city youths in an effort to aspire them toward higher learning.

"A rural university, such as Bloomsburg, has a need to develop relationships with schools located in urban communities," he says. "By entering into this partnership, the university unlocks the door to inner-city learning opportunities for its students."

According to Buehner, who chairs the trustees' ad hoc Urban Initiatives Committee, the program will enable BU to promote a culturally diverse climate on campus. "This partnership can be very beneficial to Bloomsburg University and the Harrisburg City School District," he says. "By arranging campus visitations for pupils in the Harrisburg school district, the university may begin to attract more urban students to its campus as freshmen in years to come."

Randolph G. Outen, superintendent of the Harrisburg City School District, says the partnership will prove that "people from all races and cultures can work together" in a common cause. "We are dealing in a society today in which we need to be involved in integrating activities, and I believe that Bloomsburg has expertise it can share with us as we work together to encourage our youth," he says.

"As educational leaders, we need to do as much as we can to demonstrate that this interaction can work. Both of us will benefit, if we're successful, by seeing increases in the enrollment of minority students."

BU President Harry Ansprich says university officials are constantly looking at ways to provide new kinds of learning experiences for their students. "We are always exploring new concepts and ideas that will help increase diversity on our campus. We also hope to provide some unique academic opportunities for our students."

The BU-Harrisburg partnership evolved from the efforts of many interested individuals, including Sheraton Smith, a BU senior from Harrisburg who served as the university's student representative to the trustees until graduating in December.

Legislator honored with BU medallion

State Representative Ted Stuban of Berwick was recognized as the eighth University Medallion recipient during BU's winter commencement on December 16. The university graduated 461 students — 384 undergraduates and 77 graduates — during the ceremony.

Stuban has been a House representative for Pennsylvania's 109th district since 1977. He was reelected to that office for an eighth consecutive term.

Stuban, 62, a member of the State Democratic Committee from 1974 to 1976, is former secretary of the House Appropriations Committee where he served as vice chairman of agriculture. He served on the state's transportation, health and welfare, local government, game and fisheries and rail freight policy committees.

He chairs the Youth and Aging Committee and serves as a board member for Pennsylvania College of Technology in Williamsport — formerly Williamsport Area Community College.

A member of the Berwick Borough Council from 1954 to 1958 and again from 1970 to 1976, Stuban was elected mayor of Briar Creek in 1960 and held that office for four years.

A professional auctioneer, Stuban attended Berwick High School, Wyoming Seminary and Reppert School of Auctioneering. He and his wife, Charlotte, reside in Berwick and have two children, Kathy Ann and John II.

The medallion, designed and sculpted by Richard E. Bonham of Catawissa, is a cast pewter replica of the bronze university seal medallion worn by the university's president during academic convocations and symbolizes the bringing together of a special group of people mutually interested in the mission of the university.

Past recipients were Marco Mirani, Louise Mirani, Richard Benefield, John and Helen Lanning, Eda Bessie Edwards, Daniel Bauman and James Magee.

Why have scholarships? To ease burden of debt

By SUSAN HICKS

Most of you had to help finance at least part of your education at Bloomsburg, and so do more than 78 percent of today's students.

The difference today is debt. To make ends meet, students acquire repayable bank loans and hold one or more part-time jobs. Adult students, who are often single parents, must work to support families as well. This older group of students now numbers about 1,200.

An individual student can easily incur a long-term debt, often $5,000 to $10,000 or more during the course of four years. The average four-year debt for a student who borrows from a bank is $10,700.

Each year, students collectively borrow more than $7,500,000 to attend BU. This amount conservatively translates to each graduating class holding a debt of $21 million or more — a sizable sum for those planning to relocate, attend graduate school, or make a marriage commitment. Some new graduates do all of these things.

In addition to the state and federal financial aid of approximately $14,876,000 annually, the university contributes $400,000 from its operating budget to help provide more aid to students. These amounts support campus jobs for about 1,600 students. Other students who need part-time employment must find it off-campus.

Student scholarships, while still recognizing academic merit, have an additional role today: reducing a student's long-term debt. Scholarship dollars are not borrowed — an important consideration for the students, the donors and the university. A commitment to this form of financial assistance is a statement about the true value of higher education — and the priority of the donor.

Only three percent of BU students receive some scholarship aid, and one percent receives full scholarships. Scholarships range in value from $50 to the full college costs. Awards of $500 or more begin to have a significant effect on a student's debt.

The actual cost of attending Bloomsburg University in 1990-1991, including set fees and estimated living expenses, is $6,850 for an on-campus student. A student who lives in town will need $7,480, and a commuter student will need $6,620. The cost for out-of-state students rises to $8,978 for campus residence and $9,668 for off-campus.

The discrepancy between cost and available financial aid creates, in many instances, long-term debt — the debt that concerned alumni will want to help reduce.

Many BU alumni and friends have already made a long-term commitment by pledging to The Trust for Generations campaign to create an endowed scholarship fund. Other scholarship awards continue to be made through the Alumni Association and specifically named scholarships.

By working individually and together, BU alumni are in the fortunate position of collectively being able to help reduce student debt. The financial commitment of BU alumni and friends is truly an important investment for everyone.

Please consider how you can increase your investment in the future for BU students. The rewards can be significant and personally rewarding.

Fall athletic teams compile winning record of .635

By MARY GARDNER

A runner-up finish in the national championships by the field hockey team, the first season of varsity competition for women's soccer, and a berth in the conference playoffs for men's soccer highlighted the recently completed fall season that saw the Huskies' six teams combine for a record of 52-29-4, a winning percentage of .635.

Bloomsburg hosted the field hockey national championships for the first time since 1982 and took a good shot at winning the university's fifth national title in the sport, but a pair of goals by Trenton State in the second half lifted the Lions to a 2-1 victory and the national crown. The Huskies' loss was their first of the season after 23 wins, which helped establish a school record for consecutive wins in a season.

Gardner

The club also set some other school and individual standards as the 18 regular-season wins equalled a record set by the 1987 national championship team. Senior Kathy Frick and sophomore Denise Miller both surpassed the single-season scoring record held by Sharon Reilly (18 goals in 1987) by scoring 26 and 22 goals, respectively.

Coach Jan Hutchinson's squad won its fifth Pennsylvania Conference championship in a tournament hosted by Bloomsburg and captured a regional title at home enroute to the national championship rounds. The club was rated number one in the nation in the NCAA Division III rankings throughout the season and made its 10th consecutive appearance in the national tourney. During the season, Hutchinson also achieved a new personal milestone as she earned her 200th victory in field hockey and ended the season at 217-35-16.

WOMEN'S SOCCER made its debut as a member of the varsity program this fall, which was a successful one as Coach Chuck Landermilch's team finished 7-7-1. The Huskies faced a formidable schedule that included 11 of 15 games on the road including matches against four nationally ranked teams.

The squad was never under the .500 mark and had some impressive outings, including a 0-0 double overtime tie with NAIA power West Virginia Wesleyan and a tough 1-0 loss to Adelphi, a team rated fourth in NCAA Division II.

The young team was, not surprisingly, led in scoring by youthful performers, including sophomore Tiffany Burrier (nine goals), junior Sue Cooley (five goals, five assists) and freshmen Kim McColligan (four goals, one assist) and Melissa McKay (four goals, one assist).

AFTER A 13-YEAR ABSENCE, the men's soccer team returned to the Pennsylvania Conference playoffs and, although the visit was short-lived, it bodes well for the future. The Huskies, under Steve Goodwin, finished with a 7-9-3 overall mark but earned the playoff spot based on their performance in divisional games. Millersville scored a 2-0 win over Bloomsburg in the conference semifinals to eliminate the Huskies.

Senior Kurt Schmid led the club in scoring with eight goals and one assist, followed by senior Eric Pfizenmayer with four goals and an assist, and juniors Quay Hanna and John Marshall with three and two goals.

A BAD START by the football team put the Huskies in a must-win situation throughout the middle of the season if they were to entertain any hopes of a title, and they made it almost all the way back. After losing their first four games, Pete Adrian's team won four of their next five outings to set the stage for a showdown at Millersville with the Pennsylvania Conference's Eastern Division title on the line. The Huskies went up 28-7 in the first half, but couldn't stop a Marauder comeback and dropped a 40-35 decision.

Wide receiver Stef Kern had the most productive season offensively as he tied a school record for career touchdowns at 21, catching 10 scoring passes this year to go along with the 11 he had prior to the start of the season. Alan Eck was on the other end of those passes to Kern and completed better than 56 percent of his throws, completing 194 of 343 for 2,166 yards. Part of the reason for the Huskies' offensive success was the play of offensive tackle Eric Jonassen, who was the club's long selection to the ECAC All-Star team and a candidate for All-American honors.

Defensively, the top performances came mainly from the outside and the linebackers as Dion Krause topped the Huskies with 90 tackles and fellow linebacker Jay Marshall added 56. Defensive end Vinny Mennella was second in that category with 75 tackles and led the team with 14 hits for lost yardage.

THE WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY team was again one of the leaders in the Pennsylvania Conference as the Huskies finished fifth in the conference meet. Senior Pam Mitchell earned all-conference honors for the third year in a row, finishing 11th among 78 entrants in the conference run. She was among the leaders in every race the Huskies ran this season, including a first-place finish at Kutztown and several runner-up showings. Coach Tom Martucci's team also placed 11th in the NCAA Division II Eastern Regional race.

THE MEN'S TEAM went into the conference race with high expectations of notching their highest place ever but did not live up to their expectations and finished a disappointing 10th among the 14 teams. The following week, the club rebounded to place 16th in the NCAA Regional, finishing ahead of at least one team that was in front of the Huskies the previous week.

Junior Mark Jobes was the club's top performer for Coach Lanny Conner throughout the campaign and was 53rd among 95 runners in the conference race and 56th among 175 in the regional. He will be one of many returning participants for the young team next year.

WOMEN'S TENNIS post an 8-3 record and ended up in third place in the Pennsylvania Conference championships. Doc Mike Herbert's squad registered its 10th winning season in his 13 years in charge of the program.

Junior Michelle Strutt and freshman Nicole Dreyer had the top individual records at 9-4 and 10-4. Strutt built her record at number three singles and reached the conference finals. Dreyer played number five and was a PC semifinalist.

Two athletes named Academic All-Americans

BU's Cindy Slocum and Tom Kuntzleman have been named to the GTE Academic All-American softball and at-large teams, respectively. The duo was earlier named to the All-District II teams and were Pennsylvania Conference scholar-athletes for the third time.

Slocum was named to the college division softball third team, which includes NCAA Division II and III softball teams throughout the country.

Kuntzleman, a member of the Huskies' wrestling team, was on the university division at-large second team since Bloomsburg competes in Division I in his sport.

Slocum, a senior elementary major, has built a cumulative grade point average of 3.49, and Kuntzleman, a senior secondary education chemistry major, has a cumulative grade point average of 3.98.

NCAA regulations place strict controls on recruitment

The National Collegiate Athletic Association continues to impose strict controls on the recruitment of potential student-athletes. For anyone interested in assisting BU in recruiting, there are many NCAA rules and regulations that restrict participation. These cover all contact with a potential recruit by a college's administrators, coaches, and other representatives. Although the guidelines are difficult to understand, all NCAA-member universities must adhere to the intent of the rules. These regulations affect many of BU's alumni and friends as well.

A representative of an institution's athletic interests includes people who currently are or have in the past:

1) participated in promoting the intercollegiate athletics program,

2) made financial contributions to benefit the intercollegiate athletics program,

3) assisted in the recruitment of prospects,

4) assisted in providing benefits to enrolled student-athletes or their families, or

5) have otherwise been involved in promoting the athletics program.

This multi-part definition of a representative obviously can include many people, even those with just a passing interest in the university's athletics program. But once an individual has been identified as a representative of athletic interests, the person retains that identity indefinitely.

NCAA bylaws divide institutions into Divisions I, II and III. Each division has different regulations governing recruiting practices. Because BU competes in all three levels, the rules must be consulted often and adhered to closely.

There are 16 Division II intercollegiate sports at BU. At this level, representatives of athletic

ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME SEEKS NOMINATIONS

The Bloomsburg University Athletic Hall of Fame has grown to 30 members who have received the university's highest athletic honor. Nominations are now being sought for future induction ceremonies. The nominees' names, along with sufficient information and biographical data, should be submitted to the Hall of Fame Committee.

The candidate must have participated in at least two full seasons of varsity competition at Bloomsburg. A person may only be inducted 10 years after receiving his/her bachelor's degree from Bloomsburg or another institution and may not be inducted without a degree unless a majority vote by the Hall of Fame Committee determines that person did not graduate "due to extenuating circumstances."

Nominations may also include Bloomsburg alumni who have made outstanding contributions or offered extraordinary service to athletics at Bloomsburg while undergraduates or after graduation; coaches or other athletic department personnel who have made outstanding contributions or offered extraordinary service to Bloomsburg athletics; persons who attended Bloomsburg, did not play or coach, or had very limited athletic careers but went on to achieve success in athletics as a coach at another institution, as a coach or player in professional sports, or as an administrator in college or professional athletics.

Nominations should be submitted in writing by March 15, 1991, to Jim Hollister, Sports Information Director, Waller Administration Building, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

Players' reunion features tribute to retired director

By LARRY (C B) KNOWLES '76

There is a tradition in the theatre where a single light is left burning onstage during those hours when the theatre is not in use. This is called a "ghost" light and comes steeped in theatre-lore and superstition. It must have seemed as if the superstition was based in truth in early August when over 30 former Bloomsburg Players trod the boards of the Haas Auditorium stage after a 15-20 year absence. As if by magic — theatre magic — characters long forgotten were alive again. The fly gallery and lighting fingers resounded with lines from past productions such as Ah, Wilderness!, George M!, Indians, The School for Scandal, The Music Man, Too True To Be Good, to mention only a few. But the past soon gave way to the present, and these 30 or so people, once bound by a tradition and discipline of the theatre, settled down to renew old friendships, catch up on new jobs, significant others and various locations.

On Friday evening, August 3, the halls of the Hotel Magee began to rumble with the familiar voices of actors, directors, make-up artists, set and light designers, costumers, gophers, and assorted theatrical personnel. This was the beginning of the Bloomsburg Players Reunion 1990. Cars from Kansas, Georgia, New York, Missouri, Washington, D.C., New Jersey, Maryland and many more states began to fill the parking lot. The restaurant and bar soon filled up with laughing voices. This was just the beginning of a two and a half day visit for the former theatricals.

"Oh my God" and "Do you remember . . ."

Becky "Tush" Owen and Dr Craig Himes

seemed to be the catch phrases of the weekend. Let me translate: STATEMENT — "Oh my God, you look great!" REALITY — "Oh my God, where's your hair?" STATEMENT — "Do you remember D.R.?" REALITY — "Where is the I - - - w - - - -? She said she'd be here!" STATEMENT — "Oh my God, what a great job!" REALITY — "And you got a Bachelor of Arts in theatre for that!" STATEMENT — "Do you remember?" REALITY — Yes! We haven't forgotten, we remembered. And what a joy it was to remember.

In addition to the common theme of a shared theatrical past (sounds sort of sordid?), another bond holds this group together. All worked and prospered under the careful guidance of Mr Michael J. McHale, former director of theatre at Bloomsburg University. At a banquet on Saturday evening, the group honored Mr McHale for "his contribution to his students' success." As a tribute to Mr McHale, a cherry tree will be planted outside Haas Auditorium, accompanied by an inscribed plaque. After he was given a standing ovation, Mr McHale spoke to the group, urging them to continue to do the best they possibly can. Still the teacher urging his students! On behalf of this group of people, I offer a great deal of gratitude and thanks to Mr McHale. BRAVO!

Former players attending the reunion were Daniel Boone, John Brady, Jamie Bredbenner, Bee Ermisch, Jim Fetterman, Judy Fatzinger Gross, Bernie Haas, Shelby Treon Harer, Cheryl Haviland, Dee Dee Martz Himeman, Debra Hunt-Jackson, Larry "C B." Knowles, Gail Stauk Kolenda, Bob Kolenda, Steve Lindenmuth, Cindy Whitfield Litterer, David Lockner, Laura McMurray, Joey Mattivi, Jack Matter, Jo-Anne Millard-Bunevitch, David O'Brien, Becky "Tush" Owens, John Robbins, Cathy Sneidman and Jack Watkins.

Also in attendance were BU Professors William Acierno and Craig Himes (retired), and Department of Music secretary (and the theatre's "little red-haired girl") Shirley Pahls and her husband, Gene.

Once again, on behalf of the Bloomsburg Players, I would like to thank Doug Hippenstiel and the Alumni Office staff at BU for the endless help they gave us in planning this reunion. Their help in setting up the picnic, a tour of the campus and its new buildings, local arrangements with Hotel Magee, and their personal attention to our group and its needs were invaluable. They are to be commended for making our stay in Bloomsburg yet another good memory to add to our collections. Thank you.

STRATFORD 1990 — Participating in the fourth annual Stratford (Ontario) Theatre Trip, sponsored by the BU Alumni Association, were Jean Boran, Helen Crayle, Connie Dirjen, Lucille M. DeVoe, Carol B. Edwards, Pat Evert, Elizabeth Eves, Arnold Grandage, Dorothy Grandage, Hilda Heller, Jay Hicks, H Belle Himes, Bernice Haffer, Eileen Johnson, Joan Klein, Claudia K Kotula, Muriel Miller, Selma Mitrani, Erica Nagel, Greg Nagel, Lois Nester, Wilbur Nester, Lillie M Heahoff, Howard Palmer, Patricia Palmer, Betty Reed, William I Reed, Nancy Riley, Evelyn C. Rippy, Edith M Schaia, Charles Shearer, Erma G Shearer, Richard Theodore, Joanna Torello, and Maryann Zweda. Accompanying the group were Dr Susan Rusinko, chairperson of the BU English Department, and Doug Hippenstiel, director of alumni affairs. The fifth annual theatre trip is being planned for June 11-15, 1991. (Note: This is a change from the tentative dates announced earlier.) The Ambassadors, selected through an application and interview process, serve as liaisons between the student body, the rest of the university community, and alumni. They sponsor or assist with a number of special projects and events, including Homecoming, Alumni Weekend, campus visitations by prospective students, alumni chapter events and the Senior Send-off Picnic.*

Golf outing earns $6,000 for College of Business

The 1990 annual College of Business Golf Outing, held October 10 at the Shawnee Inn Golf Course, Shawnee-on-Delaware, was a resounding success. A record number of participants earned more than $6,000 for BU's College of Business. Golfers included BU alumni, friends and corporate executives.

"The generosity of these individuals significantly benefits the College of Business students and faculty," said Carol Matteson, dean of the college. "The funds generated from the golf outing are used for projects and activities that the regular university budget cannot support."

For example, students' education is advanced when they are able to represent the university at professional conferences and interact with business professionals on a regional and national level. Being able to help host international delegations of students and faculty is another instance in which the BU community benefits from the exchange of ideas and business practices.

Robert Moyer '63, president of Shawnee Mountain, Inc., and a member of the College of Business Advisory Board, donated the use of the golf course for this event. "Being able to make this kind of contribution toward the success of the golf outing, gives us great pleasure in knowing that we are able to help advance the work of BU's College of Business," said Moyer.

Noting the growing interest in the golf outing, from 40 participants to over 95 over a four-year period, Nelson Swarts '63, program manager for IBM Corporation and also a member of the College of Business Advisory Board, said "We were delighted with this turnout — 20 more this year than anticipated. Everyone had a great time, and the outcome for BU was even greater."

Swarts helped to coordinate the golf outing along with Moyer and Anthony M. Ianiero, executive director of the BU Foundation and assistant vice president for development.

"We are very fortunate to have alumni who are willing to invest in our College of Business activities," Ianiero said. "Bob and Nelson organized an event that was filled with camaraderie, good fun and prizes. The real winners that day, however, were BU students and faculty, who benefited from the good will of 95 golfers," he added.

interests are prohibited from making in-person, off-campus recruiting contacts with a prospect, the prospect's relatives or legal guardians. On-campus contact is permitted with some restrictions. During a prospect's official visit, the athletic representative's contact is confined to the campus. Written and telephone communications are permitted, but should be coordinated through the athletic director's office as well as the head coach of the sport.

At BU, wrestling is the only Division I sport. The Division I rules prohibit representatives of athletic interests from making in-person, on- or off-campus recruiting contacts. Also prohibited are written and telephone communications with a prospect, the prospect's relatives or legal guardians.

Field hockey is the only Division III sport and is governed by a third set of rules. Representatives of athletic interests may make in-person, on- or off-campus recruiting contacts with a prospect, with a major restriction. Off-campus contacts may not occur until the conclusion of the prospect's junior year in high school. Again, these contacts should be coordinated through the athletic director's office and with the head coach of field hockey.

This brief overview of NCA A regulations does not cover all the recruiting restrictions. The penalties imposed by the NCAA on athletic programs which violate the rules and regulations are generally very severe.

If you want to help the BU athletic program with the recruitment of qualified student-athletes, or if you have questions about the NCAA regulations, please contact Mary Gardner, athletic director, at (717) 389-4363. Please help BU continue to abide by the NCAA regulations.

Assistant wrestling coach named

Larry "Zeke" Jones, a three-time All-American at Arizona State University, is the new assistant wrestling coach at BU. The 23-year-old is well known in wrestling circles and has won numerous national and international honors. He recently finished fourth in the World Championships in Toyko, Japan, bettering his seventh place showing of a year ago. He also earned an individual bronze medal at the 1990 Goodwill Games and was awarded a gold medal as a member of the victorious United States team.

The native of Ann Arbor, Michigan, is a two-time national freestyle champion at 114.5 pounds and has twice been a member of the U.S. World Team. He was a 1989 U.S. Olympic Festival champion and was a national champion and world runnerup in the Espoir Championships for competitors 20 years of age and younger.

While competing collegiately at 118 pounds, he won three PAC-10 titles for Arizona State and earned All-American honors for three consecutive years for the Sun Devils based on his high finishes at the NCAA Championships. Jones improved his placing each season, finishing sixth in 1988, fourth in 1989 and second last spring. He also competed in the prestigious All-Star Classic in his final season.

Jones' outstanding record of 134-21-3 places him third on Arizona State's career win list. His winning percentage of .858 is ninth on the Sun Devils' career charts.

Professional Development Forum

April 26, 1991

The College of Business is sponsoring a forum to recognize achievement, enhance learning, and promote scholarly discussion among alumni, students, faculty, and business people. To create opportunities for alumni to become more involved with business students and faculty, you are invited to participate in the College of Business Professional Development Forum on April 26, 1991 (see Call for Submissions this page). This date was strategically chosen to be on the Friday of Alumni Weekend to encourage alumni to return and participate. Also for those of you in the business setting, it was felt that a program such as this would engender support from your employer in allowing you the day for your professional development.

Although the primary reason for this event is professional development for all of us, there are also related goals. Since moving back into Sutliff after the renovation, the College of Business faculty have been working to continue to instill a proud identity for College of Business students. We want to create ways that students can see themselves as contributing scholars and as an integral part of the network of professionals who are alumni.

Other activities planned in conjunction with this event include:

Thursday evening, April 25 — Student clubs will sponsor five alumni speakers who will share their career experiences since graduating. A general reception for all alumni and student participants will follow these individual presentations.

Friday evening, April 26 — To celebrate 60 Years of Business Education at Bloomsburg, there will be a dinner honoring alumni from the last six decades, with alumni business educators from each decade being represented.

Carol Matteson, Dean

So come back for this time with us. Your participation is important to the College of Business, and we are striving to make the program useful to you as well. If you are a recent graduate, you may be hearing from us concerning a presentation of your work. One of our co-curricular may be contacting you concerning their program plans. Registration for the event is $25, which includes the luncheon on Friday. If you cannot attend, you may wish to send a donation to sponsor a student's attendance at the closing luncheon. All the student clubs in the College of Business are helping co-sponsor these events. The students and faculty have worked very hard and diligently on this undertaking. One way or another, try to be with us.

Professor exhibiting work at Smithsonian's National Museum of African Art

by KEVIN ENGLER

A desire to "give something back" to the country she called home for almost six years in the 1970s was the inspiration for photographer Vera Viditz-Ward to return in 1985. Traveling the dusty roads and rugged highlands of the West African nation of Sierra Leone, she began her quest to take photographs of African chieftains in the tiny Third World country.

Two years later, in 1987, Viditz-Ward presented her work — photographic portraits of African chieftains — as a bicentennial anniversary gift to the government of Sierra Leone in Freetown, the nation's capital city.

More recently, as an additional result of her efforts, the Smithsonian Institution announced it will display Viditz-Ward's photography at the National Museum of African Art through Sept. 2, 1991. The exhibit, "Paramount Chiefs of Sierra Leone: Photographic Portraits," which opened in November, consists of 38 black-and-white photographs and 10 color prints of the highest-ranking chiefs — both men and women — in their pre-colonial ceremonial regalia.

The regalia won by paramount chiefs reflects Sierra Leone's rich history. The most significant ceremonial clothing visible in the photographs is an heirloom gown. Two other items which reflect the unique customs of Sierra Leone's multi-ethnic society are associated wtih the British recognition of most paramount chiefs: A brass-topped government staff and a wooden Western-style throne.

"The paramount chieftaincy has survived the evolution of Sierra Leone from colony to independent nation and remains a prestigious governmental position," exhibition coordinator Roslyn Walker said. There are now 150 paramount chiefs, many of them descendents of rulers who predate the first contact with Europeans in the 15th century. Twelve elected chiefs sit in Sierra Leone's Parliament.

A NATIVE OF NEW YORK, Viditz-Ward attended the Hartford Art School at the University of Hartford, Conn., where she studied painting and photography and received a bachelor of fine arts degree in 1975. Following her graduation, she worked one year (1976-1977) as an associate art director for Denver magazine in Colorado.

Viditz-Ward, 38, initially traveled to Sierra Leone as a Peace Corps volunteer in 1977 at age 25. "I wanted to travel," said the photographer, who is in her third year on the BU faculty. "The Peace Corps sent me to Sierra Leone to teach high school art and work as a photographer. I quickly made friends with the people there and felt comfortable working with them."

During the three years she served as a Peace Corps volunteer, Viditz-Ward first encountered the subjects of her photo exhibit. "It was a spectacular, awsome thing to experience," she recalls. "These powerful chiefs would appear in their full regalia at public functions and celebrations . . . and I decided to photograph the chiefs during such formal appearances whenever I had the opportunity."

After returning to the United States in 1980, she began graduate studies in photography at Indiana University in Bloomington. While a student, the photographer found herself wanting to return to Sierra Leone. So she began writing grant proposals for the purpose of returning to West Africa to conduct research on the history of photography in Sierra Leone. Finally, in 1985, she received a Fulbright grant that enabled her to go back.

UPON RETURNING TO WEST AFRICA in 1985, Viditz-Ward learned that the Sierra Leone government was planning a bicentennial anniversary of Freetown in 1987. She also reestablished a friendship with Joseph Opala, an American anthropologist and lecturer at the University of Sierra Leone, whom she had met during her first visit to the country. Opala, who has lived in Sierra Leone for 15 years, had studied the historical and cultural significance of chiefly attire.

So, in addition to her photo-historical research, she decided to collaborate with Opala on the project for the bicentennial celebration. "With the bicentennial coming up, both of us a like a lot of other people, wanted to contribute something to the country," she said.

Their gift, Viditz-Ward's portraits, were displayed throughout the country in conjunction with the 1987 anniversary celebration and is now a permanent installation in the Sierra Leone National Museum in Freetown.

PARAMOUNT CHIEFS are the highest rulers of the nation's chiefdoms and have duties specifically assigned to them by the Sierra Leone government. "Unlike other West African countries, the paramount chiefs still function as civil servants," she said. "There are 150 chiefs that have specific duties (within their chiefdom) assigned to them by district officers who answer directly to the country's main government."

One of the chiefs' duties, she said, is to settle disputes in their particular chiefdom before the issue is taken to a legal court — a holdover from pre-colonial times. "Another thing that is very interesting happens during an election," she said. "All of the chiefs meet to elect 12 of their peers to serve in the Sierra Leonen parliament as representatives of the traditional values and history of the country."

The chiefs wear their traditional garments on very specific occasions, the Fulbright scholar noted. The gowns are considered very powerful and are regarded as attire that provides the chiefs with protection against negative forces. They are extremely expensive to produce, so they're not something the chief would wear everyday. Many of the gowns are handed down from one generation to the next, Viditz-Ward added, as paramount chiefs are not elected officials, but rather are descendants from traditional "ruling houses."

All of the chiefs Viditz-Ward and Opala approached were "unfailingly cooperative and extremely excited" about the project. "The chiefs were not threatened," she said. "They completely understood our project and recognized the importance of this work in terms of an historical document for the people of Sierra Leone."

Viditz-Ward said the chiefs were always cooperative, although they did not have to be. "There is no phone or mail system in the country," she said. "We had a letter from the office of the (Sierra Leone) president stating that Opala and I were serious researchers . . . and explaining that we were working on an exhibit for the bicentennial." But, she said, the president's letter did not force any of the chiefs to cooperate if they didn't want to.

All of the chiefs Viditz-Ward and Opala approached, however, were "unfailingly cooperative and extremely excited" about the project. "The chiefs were not threatened," she said. "They completely understood our project and recognized the importance of this work in terms of an historical document for the people of Sierra Leone."

Some portrait sessions were completed in an hour while others "required several days of organization because of elaborate rituals surrounding some chiefly attire," she says. For instance, before a Temne chief's supernaturally powerful gown could be removed from its sacred storage place, a ceremonial official needed a day to conduct secret ritual preparations.

SIERRA LEONE, which means "Lion Mountains," is bordered by Guinea and Liberia on the west coast of Africa. The entire nation is about the size of the state of Maine. Freetown, the capital, is the third largest natural harbor in the world and is home to Fourah Bay College, the oldest university in West Africa. English is the official and commerical language. However, each ethnic group has its own language.

During Black History Month, the museum will present special programming on the Gullah people who live on the Sea Islands of South Carolina and Georgia. The artistic traditions, customs, language and folktales of the Gullah can be traced to West Africa, particularly Sierra Leone. The programs, which include lectures, craft demonstrations and films, explore Gullah culture and its historical relationship to West Africa.

In conjunction with the exhibition, the museum has published a 12-page illustrated brochure which is available free of charge.

"Paramount Chiefs of Sierra Leone" was designed by Alan Knezevich, head of the museum's exhibits department.

The National Museum of African Art is located at 950 Independence Avenue S.W. The museum is open every day except Dec. 25 from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Grace Gilbner Zane '10, who was on the first ship to sail through the Panama Canal, celebrated her 100th birthday in September.

Born and reared in Sterling, Wayne County, she graduated from Bloomsburg Normal School in 1910 and later earned her bachelor of science degree in elementary education at Syracuse University.

Grace taught school in LaAnna, Pa., for one year. It was while she was teaching there that she met and married her husband, Frederick Walz Zane of Sellersville on October 11, 1911.

His work as an electrical engineer took them into a new environment and adventure — the Panama Canal. They resided in Pedro Migel for 11 years. When the canal officially opened in 1914, Grace was on the first ship (the Ancon) to sail through the canal. Upon returning to the States, to her hometown of Sterling, Grace and Fred settled on the family farm. Restless, Grace began writing for the Pocono Times Democrat newspaper in Stroudsburg around 1920 to 1923. Her writings were titled Dere Fren Lily by Ann Walz, her pen name. (Numerous selections are kept in a scrapbook by her daughter.)

Zane

In 1930, Grace and Fred adopted twins, a boy (William) and a girl (Mary Jane).

After her family was grown, Grace began substituting in various schools in southern Wayne County. She went to Marywood College and obtained her master's degree in special education in 1953. She became the first teacher in Wayne County to achieve this goal.

She taught a number of years in the Hamlin and South Canaan Elementary Schools. She also taught a small group of local kindergarten-age youngsters in her home for a number of years.

In the 1930s and 1940s she gave recitations and readings at various community functions and was always well received. She also directed school and community plays.

Her retirement came in 1978 after an auto accident after which she could no longer drive.

Grace is a long-time member of the Sterling Methodist Church, a member of the Eastern Star, and a member of the Laurel Blossoms Senior Citizens Group in Newtonville, Pa.

Grace lost her husband of 45 years in 1957. She has seven grandchildren (one deceased) and 11 great-grandchildren.

The past nine years Grace has been a resident of the Brookmont Health Care Center in Effort. She is in fairly good health; when out of bed she is in a wheelchair. It is difficult to communicate with her because of deafness and lapse of memory.

All communications may be sent to her daughter, Mary Jane Smith, R.D. 1, Box 197, Effort, PA 18330.

Howard F. Fenstemaker '12, former editor of The Alumni Quarterly (1926-1971) and president of the Alumni Association (1962-1971), died October 8 at age 96.

He was the recipient of the first honorary degree, doctor of pedagogy, awarded by Bloomsburg University. It was given on December 18, 1983, in recognition of his distinguished career in education and his contributions to his alma mater and the community.

He received the Alumni Association's Distinguished Service Award in 1964, and the Alumni House has been named for him.

Fenstemaker

After teaching a year in Dallas Township, Luzerne County, and two years in Berwick, he enrolled at the University of Michigan. He received his bachelor of arts degree, graduating magna cum laude in 1918, and was inducted into the Michigan chapter of Phi Beta Kappa.

He served a year in the U.S. Army, and for seven months he was stationed in Paris as a foreign language censor. He was discharged July 1, 1919, and later that month he married the former Ruth Nuss, a Normal School classmate. He taught French and Spanish in the Highland Park, Michigan, high school and junior college from 1919 to 1926, when he joined the faculty of Bloomsburg State Teachers College.

He took graduate courses at the University of Pennsylvania from 1923 to 1929. He was awarded a master's degree by New York University in 1933.

Mrs. Fenstemaker died in 1945, and in 1947 Dr. Fenstemaker married Mary Edwards of Bloomsburg.

During his 37 years as a faculty member at Bloomsburg, he taught classes in French, Latin, Spanish, German, and history of civilization, as well as many classes not covered by other instructors. He commented later that he welcomed those assignments because of the opportunities for contact with more students.

His participation in college activities extended beyond the classroom. In addition to his work on many committees, he was director of both the band and orchestra and served as commencement organist for 15 years.

He also served as organist for First English Baptist Church for 50 years, as organist for the Caldwell Consistory, York and Scottish Rite Masons, and as pianist for the Bloomsburg Kiwanis Club until recent years.

He also served as lay moderator, deacon and teacher of the men's Sunday School class at his church for many years.

We received the following delightful correspondence about two ladies from the Class of 1919:

"Perhaps the enclosed picture will be of interest to you. These two ladies are graduates of Bloomsburg — long before it was Bloomsburg State Teachers College. They graduated from Bloomsburg Normal School in 1919.

"These ladies are Fay (Eshleman) Stine and Elizabeth (Betty Hanner) DeLong. They were roommates during their time in college and have remained friends all these years even though they have lived some distance apart. They each live in their family homes — the same houses they called home in 1919 and before. (Fay was born in hers.)

"Fay, who was May Queen when she attended your school, is a widow. She has a son, two grandchildren, and a great-granddaughter. She is in good health and continues to do Notary work from her home.

"Betty, also a widow, also in good health, keeps up with the times by reading and traveling (sometimes to visit Fay) with her friend and neighbor, Anne, who does the driving.

"These are two really 'with it' women who, when they are together, reminisce about their college days and what good times they had at Bloomsburg, often noting how different college is today.

"I thought it interesting, in this time when relationships are so fragile, that this friendship has truly stood the test of time. What a fine example for all of us!

"Incidentally, I am Fay's daughter-in-law."

The writer was Sandra J. Stine of Hershey, Pa. Thank you for sharing this nice story.

Navy Years

Rodney Williams writes: "I've enjoyed the last four Alumni Quarterly issues, but do miss seeing any news of my Navy friends. As you know, we do get together once in a while. I did run into our old Navy Chief, Jack Llewellyn . . . might be nice of you to post his address, #1970 Greenlawn, Englewood, Fl. 34223.

"Jack Cronin and I married two sisters from Bloomsburg, Ione and Dot Hendershott. The Cronins live in Newark, Delaware, and I in Vermont. After my Navy years I went into architecture and practiced architecture until 1970, then we opened a little inn in Vermont. Now, still do a little business of architecture just to get away from the inn."

Along with his note came some information about The Inn at Sawmill Farm in West Dover, Vermont. The inn has been the subject of numerous travel writers, who have given it rave reviews.

Among the guests have been former British Prime Minister Edward Heath, Paul Newman, former Senator Thomas Eagleton, the Sargent Shrivers and Judge Wapner. Williams had to turn away Barbra Streisand because the inn was full when she called.

Any alumni of the "Navy Years" at Bloomsburg are cordially invited to send news for The Alumni Quarterly.

Alumnus donates Buckalew papers

Several papers of Charles R Buckalew have been given to the University Archives as a gift from Dr. William W. Hummel, Class of 1947, a biographer of Buckalew, according to J. Daniel Vann, dean of Library Services.

Buckalew, a Columbia County native, resided in the present home of BU presidents, Buckalew Place, in the late 1800s. He served as a Pennsylvania state senator, U.S minister to Ecuador, and as a U.S. congressman and senator. He was also a trustee of Bloomsburg State Normal School from 1874 to 1890.

Hummel wrote Charles R Buckalew: Democratic Statesman in a Republican Era as his dissertation at the University of Pittsburgh in 1963. A copy is in the University Archives. Hummel has retired as a professor of history at Albright College.

University Archivist and Associate Professor Roger W. Fromm reports that the papers received by the Archives include a letter apprising Buckalew of an attempted burglary in Buckalew Place and a letter with clippings regarding women's suffrage addressed to Buckalew by the vice president of the Pennsylvania Women Suffrage Association.

Other items received include notes of Buckalew's journeys while he was in Ecuador, a draft resolution by the Pennsylvania House and Senate protesting what were termed unconstitutional actions of President Lincoln, and a printed speech that Buckalew delivered in the U.S. Senate on the reconstruction of the South.

Many of Buckalew's papers are housed in the Library of Congress.

Robert M. Llewellyn '48 died in August at age 73. Survivors include his wife, Eve, a daughter and a son

John F. Magill Jr. '48 was the principal speaker when the Veterans Memorial at the Fenstemaker Alumni House was dedicated on Homecoming 1989 He asked that his remarks be printed here as an appeal to his classmates, and other alumni, to support the Veterans Memorial Scholarship

I come to you in complete humility and with overwhelming appreciation on this occasion. Humility, because I have been asked to put our long-standing emotions into words, appreciation, because all of you assembled here have made this dedication possible

But how does one put into words the emotion evoked by the mental parade of youthful faces who short years ago walked on this campus but then made the ultimate sacrifice for freedom? How does one pay fitting and proper homage to those who "gave it all"?

But, on the other hand, this memorial is not a singular event. It is not a memorial to glorify war. It it a memorial that honors young Americans who once graced this campus and then "gave it all" for two eternal hopes — freedom and peace. But it does not stop there. While we will place our associates into Gold Star status, we will also establish an on-going memorial to honor those who served! What a tribute to those who served! And finally, this dedication opens up a living legacy to help fulfill the hopes and dreams of incoming students who can receive a needed boost from our memorial scholarships.

But now, for just one brief moment in time, will you close all other things from your mind and travel back with me to the fall of 1941 I know that many of you recall with vivid recollection the faces and events that transpired here on this campus. We innocently entered the campus to the tune of "I Don't Want to Set the World on Fire," little realizing that on December 7 the entire world would be set ablaze Can you visualize how the "Winds of War" swept through this campus and into each village, calling students and graduates alike to answer the greatest threat to freedom's survival that the world has ever known.

Fully aware that this dedication honors all who died or served in the pursuit of freedom from 1839 to present, I must, however, personalize this dedication by collectively honoring the many of us from the past 150 years through the use of the names of those who "gave it all" from World War II For you see, while we do not have at present the full and official roll call for those many decades, we do have a full and complete honor roster from World War II And so, standing in for all, are these twenty-seven honored students and graduates. In honored reverence, will you memorialize the faces as we call the roll here on this Homecoming Day for those who didn't make it home:

Kenneth M Allen, John L. Atkinson, Lamar K. Blass, Leonard M Bowers, John R. Carr, Robert W Cresswell, Joseph J. Evancho, John Hancock, James Harman, Earl J. Harris, Leo J. Hoffman, John L. Hower, Woodrow W. Hummel, Donald Jenkins, Walter J Kania, Clyde C. Kitch, Allen C. McCracken, Paul J. McHale, Thomas W Reagen, Walter H. Reed, Cyril J. Rowland, Albert E. Rudy, Mary F Schuyler, Michael Soback, Victor R.

ROOMIES' REUNION — Some members of the Class of 1961 have held a roommate reunion every summer since two years after graduation Betty Deal reports: "We meet one weekend each summer at alternating homes At one time the number of people attending was 26, including the roommes, their husbands and children. It is a great time to see each other, keep track of our children's growth, schooling and now marriages; to reminisce of Bloomsburg days and sing (much to our husbands' dismay) the old school songs, especially when doing the dishes. But the best part is all the delicious desserts. Each one of us brings our favorite desserts (one or two) and we all pig out We thought that since we were coming up on 30 years, that the school should know about our continued close bonds established during the four years at Bloom Shown in photo are (kneeling) Jane (O'Neill) Huttinger, Ava Jo (Hilner) Shippy; (standing) Betty (Clark) Deal, Barbara (Monroe) Gassey, Bobbie (Strain) Kennedy, Mary (Redman) Bickelman*

Turini, Chalmers G. Wennick, Anthony C. Yenalavage.

But now, in a humble effort to further personalize this memorial, we will pluck three names from the just-completed roll and have them briefly pass in review for you.

Flashing before our mind's eye is handsome Donny, who had it all and might well have run in the Olympics, but instead he "gave it all" in a flaming B-24 bomber over Ploesti. You see, he had to bring his bomber in at 250 feet, into the unbelievable flak, to knock out the fuel capacity of the Nazi regime.

Right behind him marches lovely Mary, who had all kinds of hopes and dreams and promise, but she "gave it all" so that peace and freedom could come back to this campus. She symbolizes the oft-forgotten servicewomen whose actions exemplified love, duty, honor and country.

Rounding out our symbolic trio is shy Allen. He, too, planned to graduate and teach, but he "gave it all" on the soil of Europe. Millard Ludwig and I were present when they transferred his body from its foreign resting place to the tranquility of our national cemetery in Gettysburg. We vowed then that these sacrifices to peace and freedom must be remembered.

The final stimulus came from a pilgrimage to the American military cemeteries in Europe, where the white, gleaming markers stood in endless perfect symmetry — these final resting places for so many of our American boys and girls were described so poignantly by the late author, Cornelius Ryan, as "the highest priced real estate in the world." A young Dutch school girl came to the podium and in broken English said something like this:

"Let them sleep, dear God, they are so very tired.

Let them wake, whole again, to the soothing sounds of soft music, love and laughter.

Let them wake to the sight of green hills and majestic fields of flowers.

Then, tell them, dear God, that they are loved and missed.

But most of all, dear God, tell them that they did not die in vain.

Donny, and Mary, and Allen, we salute and honor you on this Homecoming Day on behalf of all who gave that last full measure of devotion. We've caught the banner of peace and the torch of freedom that you have passed to us with trembling hands. For on this day, we make a solemn pledge to you — our symbolic trio — a pledge which will echo through the corridors of time to all who will grace this campus — a pledge, with loud, resounding words which transcend the years from 1839 to this memorable day. This then is our pledge:

Donny, and Mary, and Allen, we have, this day, insured and hallowed the priceless legacy and sacrifice that you and your countless friends have granted to us, the living. We have sealed this pledge indelibly and infinitely with deeds, not words, by demonstration, not lip service. We have sealed this pledge with the dedication of this memorial to peace and freedom!

Scrimgeour cites key role models in his life at BU

Senior faculty member John S. Scrimgeour, Class of 1953, delivered the graduation address during the university's commencement convocation on December 16.

In his message, Scrimgeour, a psychological counselor in the Center for Human Development, spotlighted those individuals who have played important roles in his academic and professional careers at BU.

Scrimgeour

Scrimgeour, also a member of the BU Alumni Board of Directors, talked about values and the people who were role models for him at Bloomsburg. One such person was Kimber Kuster, a much loved and respected biology professor, he said.

Scrimgeour said he hoped people in the audience would reflect on individuals who have touched their lives in a positive way. "Armed with renewed inspiration or qualities they choose to emulate, their lives will be enhanced," he said. "They in turn can touch the lives of others, and the good is passed along."

Originally from West Pittston, Scrimgeour came to BU as a physical science instructor in January 1959. Prior to his appointment as a psychological counselor 18 years ago, he worked as a financial aid director, placement director, assistant basketball coach, freshmen orientation director, and chairperson of the university's 125th anniversary committee. He continues to be active on various campus committees and directs institutional standardized testing.

Scrimgeour, 59, a graduate of West Pittston High School in 1949, attended Wilkes University for a year before transferring to Bloomsburg, where he earned a bachelor of science degree in general science in 1953. He earned master's degrees in physical science (1963) and counselor education (1972) at Penn State University.

In 1953, Scrimgeour enlisted in the U.S. Naval Reserve and later served with VA-46, a carrier-based jet squadron, until 1957. The squadron was based aboard the USS Randolph as part of the Sixth Fleet during the 1956 Suez crisis.

He is married to the former Jeananne Evans of Hanover Township, a 1954 Bloomsburg graduate, and they have three daughters — Lynne, Laurie Scrimgeour Landis, and Leanne Scrimgeour Lovice — and a grandson.

Archaeology projects topic of alumni breakfast lecture

Two assistant professors of anthropology shared their research at the first Alumni Breakfast Lecture on October 23. Presenting mini lectures, illustrated by slides, were Dee Ann Wymer and Tom Aleto.

Wymer led BU's archeological fieldschool in which BU students spent six weeks in central Ohio as part of a national archaeology research team this summer. The lecture, "From Mastodons to Moundbuilders: 12,000 Years of Human Occupation in Central Ohio," focused on the unique discoveries made by BU students, including the excavation of a burial mound and adjacent living area dating to 700 B.C. and the investigation of a glacial crag from which the intact remains of a butchered mastodon was recovered.

Aleto, in his portion of the program, spoke about "Life and Death in a Late Prehistoric Ecuadorian Culture." He has conducted his research in Ceibo Grande, one of the principal towns of the Puruaes, a late prehistoric culture of southern Ecuador. It was occupied at the time of Spanish contact and was visited by Francisco Pizarro during his conquest of the Inca empire. Research undertaken at Ceibo Grande by BU is directed toward understanding the complex economic and political systems that characterized Puruae culture and society. Excavations in 1990 revealed an interesting pattern of burial involving cremation, interment in large urns and possible cannibalism, as well as evidence of a rare, elaborate form of Inca burial.

Additional lectures featuring other BU faculty members will be planned, perhaps once a month. Held in the Pennsylvania Room of the Scranton Commons from 7:15 to 8:30 a.m., the breakfast lectures are designed specifically for retired alumni and those who have flexible work schedules.

Locally owned and staffed, the bank had six million dollars in assets in 1960, today it has $75 million. In 1985, according to the American Banker survey, the bank was number 29 out of over 12,000 banks in the country on return of assets. It's continued to be in the top 100 banks for the past five years.

In September, Willard completed his term as president of the Community Bankers' Association of Pennsylvania.

"I've enjoyed very much my association with 160 community banks across Pennsylvania," he said. "It's been a busy year traveling from New Tripoli to Harrisburg to meet with Lt. Gov. Singel, Treasurer Knoll, Secretary of Banking Hargrove and other leaders in state government.

"The highlight thus far would have to be meeting with Vice President Quayle for a luncheon at a private residence in the Camp Hill area when he was in Harrisburg."

In the late 1960s, Willard was elected president of the Lehigh Valley Chapter of American Institute of Banking and also served as president of Lehigh County Bankers' Association during that period. He also taught AIB classes at Muhlenberg College for about 10 years.

He is also active with the Independent Bankers Association of America, currently serving on the Bank Services Committee.

"I love being a community banker," he said. "We get to know our customers well, and it's a joy to help them finance their homes and other consumer goods and see their children grow, attend college, etc."

Chick DeFebo '58 was featured in an article by Harriet Williamson which appeared in the July 29 issue of the Sunday Patriot-Times. Excerpts follow:

What does a frustrated jazz player do when his daylight job interferes with his nighttime desire to listen to and play jazz? In the case of Chick DeFebo, he quits his job and buys a tavern that will feature jazz.

DeFebo owns Chick's in Hummelstown, a club that now spotlights jazz every third Friday. That affords DeFebo two pleasures. "I get to hear the local bands that I pick, and I get to sit in with them."

DeFebo has ample experience. Although education was his main career for 25 years, jazz playing was never overshadowed. In fact, the bassman even broke away from teaching for a while to go on the road.

After teaching two years in Allentown and balancing that daytime job against playing bass seven nights a week, DeFebo went on the road with a rhythm and blues band.

Wanting to explore the foreign market, the band arranged to play for free aboard a Europe-bound cruise liner in return for free passage. The combo then spent five months touring Holland, Sweden, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, playing night-clubs and officers' clubs at Army and Navy bases.

At tour's end, DeFebo returned to Harrisburg and to teaching. He taught fourth grade at Herbert Hoover Elementary School in Susquehanna Township for seven years and then was named principal for seven years. Before retiring from education in 1981, he also served as principal of the middle school for seven years.

While he was still working in education, he was involved in musicals at Harrisburg Community Theatre and the Jewish Community Center.

George Chaump '58 is head football coach at the Naval Academy in Annapolis. George is famous for churning out incredible teams at John Harris High School in the mid-1960s.

Since then, he was an assistant at Ohio State and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, then head coach at Indiana University of Pennsylvania and Marshall University.

Joe Malt '58 was honored at a retirement dinner on May 10 after a distinguished career as educator. He and his wife, Alice, immediately started an exciting series of travels out west, to Nashville and Florida. In between, they visited their summer home on Harvey's Lake.

Joe graduated in 1958 and started teaching business education at Plainfield High School. Before long he was head of the department, then assistant principal and then principal. In 1972 he went to the David Brearley High School where he became principal.

During that time he served as the State Juvenile Conference Commissioner for 15 years and as the executive commissioner for the Union County Athletic Association for 10 years. He was also on the executive council of New Jersey Principals and Supervisors Association for four years.

Joe and Alice Jane Calhoon were married in 1952. They have six children and nine grandchildren, and are expecting their 10th on December 25.

"This experience has been so rewarding that I would like to share the opportunity with other educators, particularly my classmates from '59, as a suggestion for sabbatical leaves and early retirees.

"We need experienced teachers to work with Guatemalan counterparts in bilingual education. Students (K-12) are taught half in English and half in Spanish in a program that has been turning out bilingual graduates since 1949. Your colleagues will be an eclectic mix of English and Spanish speakers with experiences from many parts of the world. Although the school has modest means, it has a beautiful campus on a hill overlooking Guatemala City. Our student body, representing all classes of Guatemalan society, is pleasant and well-mannered. Faculty, students and staff work together in an ambience which is friendly and cosmopolitan.

"Although Spanish is not required, Guatemala abounds with excellent Spanish schools and affords the opportunity to return home bilingual."

Carol has recently been selected by the Valley Forge Freedom Foundation in Valley Forge to receive its annual George Washington Honor Medal for her work in Economic Education.

The awards recognize individuals and organizations that serve as examples of responsible citizenship, offer solutions to contemporary problems, or promote the benefits of a free society.

Carol's project, "Farms to Corporations, American Free Enterprise at Work," involved 80 eight-year-old students in the Southern Lehigh School District, near Allentown. In conjunction with a social studies unit on research skills, Carol had the children study the country of their ethnic origin. Their reports became the foundation of a "product" the children produced, advertised and marketed.

Recipes from the various countries, interviews with people who were born abroad, original art, and a group essay on freedom, became a unique cookbook the children named, Child to Child, International Recipes That Reach Out. The profits from this book have sponsored three Amerasian children in the Philippines and through the Pearl S. Buck Foundation, have sold copies all over the world.

"To explore new horizons, to be caught in the magic of discovery, to feel the emotionality of children reaching out to help other children, is an exhilerating experience," Carol said. "This project has been most gratifying because of the global understanding it has promoted. Child to Child is a celebration of ethnic differences, and a powerful lesson in tolerance," she said.

Last year, Carol was honored by the Governor's Selection Committee as the only elementary finalist for Pennsylvania's Teacher of the Year contest.

James J. Gallagher '64, a museum educator at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, was named the 1990 "Teacher of the Year" by the Committee to Support Philadelphia Public Schools. Chosen from a field of 40 semi-finalists, he received a cash prize of $5,000 in the contest, sponsored by Arco Chemical Co. and the CSPPS, a group of business leaders.

He was recognized at the Celebration of Excellence in Teaching Reception and Award Ceremony on November 14. At the awards ceremony, school board president Herman Mattleman praised Gallagher and the other teachers honored.

"People who don't know tend to deprecate the job of teachers. They talk about short hours and a short school year, but they just don't know. Teaching is the most important job in America," he said.

Upon receipt of the award, Gallagher, who fought tears of joy, said he was surprised. "I never thought I'd be standing here in front of all my friends. There are so many people who deserve this."

As the Franklin Institute museum teacher, Gallagher is one of eight School District of Philadelphia teachers employed in a program that is one of kind in the nation. The district hires teachers to help link the city's museums, City Hall and the zoo, with classroom studies.

Gallagher teaches an estimated 17,000 students each year, giving them innovative lessons in anything from microscopes and physics to earthquakes and the metric system.

His talent, said Leonard Rovner, the school principal who nominated Gallagher, is the ability to teach all levels of students and make complicated concepts fun and understandable.

"He not only has to be a specialist in his field, but he has to be able to deal with every special need of the students. He teaches regular education students, deaf students, blind students, and he has to be able to do it at every grade level," said Rovner.

Gallagher, who is legally blind, has further distinguished himself among his colleagues as an advocate for learners who have disabilities. He founded the nation's first teachers' union local for educators with vision and hearing impairments as well as those with diabetes, muscular dystrophy and multiple sclerosis.

Gallagher said that being visually impaired had made him a better teacher.

"You become sensitive to other people's feelings growing up the way I did," he said.

George Cunningham '67 of Barnesville has been named assistant principal of Hamburg Area High School. He received his secondary school principal's certificate at Lehigh University.

The mixed media works of Arthur Hakim '67 were the featured exhibit in MacDonald Art Gallery at College Misericordia in August. The show, which included watercolor, sculpture, acrylic and drawing, was a selection of 30 pieces of Hakim's life work done in three different phases.

"I've always liked the social comment phase of my work which began in 1969 and is on going," he observed. "It has enabled me to get my message across about what is happening in the world."

While Hakim continues to use all mediums to express his "social comment," his versatility is evident in his realism and abstract work from the early 1970s.

Hakim considers himself an experimenter and colorist and began using watercolor, shaped canvases and collage construction in 1971. His sculptures are free form except for some of his work which carries social comment. Hakim uses confinement as the central theme of many of his sculptures and uses what he calls a vacuum-formed plastic sculpture machine to form plastic around his subject matter. His most recent work was consisted of moon shots and flying saucers including one of his experimental pieces, "Lunar Landscape II."

Hakim strives for a particular reaction from his viewer and has done a number of series of works particularly on social comment which some view as controversial.

The recipient of over 100 awards for his art works, Hakim has exhibited his art widely throughout the United States. He

'Burly' Grimes Loyalty Awards for 1990

Sixty-six Bloomsburg University alumni have earned distinction as recipients of the third annual Richard "Burly" Grimes Loyalty Awards. They earned this recognition in 1990 by attending a regional alumni chapter event, by returning to campus for either Alumni Weekend or Homecoming*, and by contributing to the Alumni Annual Fund. Attending both Alumni Weekend and Homecoming can substitute for a regional alumni chapter event, since the latter are not held in all areas every year.

The award honors "Burly" Grimes, a retired teacher from Harrisburg, who has missed only one Alumni Weekend or Homecoming since he was graduated in 1949. He currently serves on the Alumni Board of Directors.

The art work of Ruth Trapane '67 was featured in an exhibit at BU's Haas Gallery in September.

Her paintings are a renewal of the ancient art form of using a "hot wax" process that is encausted into a surface, and motivated by the descriptions astronauts have given of the colors they have seen in space. Such paintings contain colors that other forms of art do not contain, but which encaustic paint conveys well.

Hot wax can hold gold, bronze, pewter and other metallic hues. The greatest asset, however, is the opalescent and iridescent paints that are so often seen in photos from space as the sun reflects off the water, snow and other surfaces.

Ruth is a member of the Encaustic Network Unlimited

A painter and teacher for over 20 years, she earned master of science and master of arts degrees at BU. She has sold paintings in many states and has just lately entered into competition. Her work has won in every National Encaustic Show

A kindergarten teacher in the Berwick Area Schools, she has also studied at Marywood College, investigating the use of art as therapy.

"I am now working at John Wanamaker in Langhorne and doing some substitute teaching in my former school district, Bristol Township."

Richard has lots of stories related to the Kuwaiti invasion, the best being that his Canadian friends and their three children escaped from Kuwait to Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, by using Richard's four-wheel drive vehicle. Richard had just purchased the car, and it certainly got a useful workout. The family drove 21 hours through the desert They are now safe in North America.

Freelance writer Suzan Mazur, a native of Plymouth, has a penchant for visiting the world's trouble spots to gather material for writing assignments for American and foreign publications.

Hardly settled back in her Manhattan apartment after a hair-raising trip to Colombia, she took off for Saudi Arabia where she witnessed first-hand the buildup of U.S. forces and spoke with key Saudi officials.

"I was in Saudi Arabia for two weeks and traveled widely, visiting the rich cities of Juball and Yanbu, both highly industrialized," she said.

Mazur noted that she met our servicemen and women everywhere and noted that the American presence is most visible. One of the Saudi projects brought to her attention by officials is the process of making fresh water from such sources as the Arabian Sea.

In Juball, located near Kuwait, on the Red Sea, she was the guest of Prince Abdullah Bin Faisaa, a member of the influential Al-Saud family.

"The prince oversees the fortunes of Juball and Yanbu, the combined wealth of which is $45 billion," Mazur said

Prince Abdullah has been interviewed on CNN's "Crossfire," and was the subject of an interview on the McNeil-Lehrer Report recently.

"He is a well-educated and knowledgeable person and was a gracious host," she said

Mazur knows her way around a newsroom and used her credentials for a tour of Riyadh Daily in Saudi Arabia where she interviewed Talaat Wafa, editor-in-chief of the newspaper. She was in the kingdom working on stories for the Economist, London-based weekly, and New York's Newsday

PCAA recognizes State System alumni for roles as educators

Outstanding educators from throughout the Commonwealth recently were honored for their achievements as graduates of State System of Higher Education universities by the Pennsylvania Council of Alumni Associations (PCAA).

Representing Bloomsburg University was Sharon Gettel-Olff, principal of the Pine Grove Area Elementary School. Earlier this year, Ms. Gettel-Olff was also designated as one of Bloomsburg University's "Young Alumni of the Year" for 1990.

Gettel-Olff

"One of every 34 Pennsylvania citizens is either a graduate of a State System university or is attending one," said Janice Bishop, PCAA president and a graduate of West Chester University of Pennsylvania. "Also, over 60 percent of Pennsylvania teachers are State System alumni.

"These alumni were selected because of their accomplishments and contributions to the education profession," Bishop added. "The PCAA believes they are role models for the next generation of teachers."

State Representative Elinor Z. Taylor (R-West Chester), State System Chancellor James H. McCormick, and three of the alumni honorees addressed a gathering of PCAA members, university representatives, and legislators from the state House of Representatives and Senate Education Committees.

"State System alumni are the human resource which makes Pennsylvania great," Chancellor McCormick said. "Three of every four System graduates remain in Pennsylvania to live and work. They are a valuable asset to the economy of the Commonwealth.

"The leadership of the Pennsylvania Council of Alumni Associations is commended for its efforts to honor and highlight the outstanding alumni of the state-owned universities," Dr. McCormick noted.

"All of today's honorees are role models of the State System," Rep. Taylor — an alumna, former faculty member and administrator of West Chester University — said. "Regular recognition of outstanding alumni role models should be added to the mission of the System.

"This group of top quality educators proves that, together, State System alumni can and do make a difference."

'Everything You Do' video documentary completed by BU

Bloomsburg University announces the completion of "Everything You Do," a video documentary that focuses on the many environmental issues causing public concern in Pennsylvania and surrounding states.

"Everything You Do," hosted by former NASA astronaut Scott Carpenter, was produced as a public service following BU's environmental symposium and teleconference titled "Global Change and Our Endangered Environment: From Pennsylvania to Planet Earth" held last October as a feature of the university's Sesquicentennial celebration. The hour-long video program examines ways in which government agencies, businesses, industries, the media, educational institutions, and especially we as individuals, can participate and work together on bettering the region in which we live and the planet on which we live.

Joseph

"Many of us still believe it's up to someone else to solve the problems facing our planet," says Carpenter in the video's opening minutes. "Our overflowing landfills, toxic waste dumps and polluted waters not only contain someone else's trash or wastewater, but also the products we choose to buy and the chemicals we decide to use in our everyday lives."

According to Tom Joseph, director of BU television services, copies of the video will be made available to educational institutions, businesses, industries, broadcast cable outlets and other interested groups or organizations upon request.

For more information, call Joseph at 717-389-4002.

Alumna serves Peace Corps in Jamaica

Yvonne Bowersox '87 was featured in an article by C. J. Marshall which appeared in the Milton Standard-Journal. Excerpts follow:*

Yvonne Bowersox has just finished "the toughest job she'll ever love."

Bowersox, of Montandon, has come home after a two-year hitch in the Peace Corps. During that time, Bowersox used her abilities as an educator to transfer learning skills to teachers in Jamaica, as well as to establish programs to make life easier and more enjoyable for some of the people in the country.

(While at Bloomsburg), she decided she wanted to experience different cultures — to see how people live outside the U.S. She said she decided to do this by using her teaching skills to combat illiteracy in a foreign country.

While in college, she investigated several organizations which place teachers on an international basis. She discovered, however, that one criterion of most organizations is that a person have at least two years of teaching experience. Bowersox said a friend in the Peace Corps informed her that the organization is eager to recruit people right out of college, and does not require them to be experienced.

As a result, she applied to the Peace Corps for a teaching position. She filled out a 13-page application, and submitted it through the regional office in Philadelphia. She was interviewed by a recruiter, who forwarded the application to Washington for final approval.

She said she waited a few months while countries applied to the Peace Corps for people with various skills. She said Jamaica then was conducting an education drive, and that's how she was placed there.

According to Bowersox, it is very difficult for volunteers to choose the country in which they want to serve. A particular country may not have need for a person's skills, or the (officials) may not be willing to work with those types of skills. This is why people must be flexible in the choice of where they wish to serve.

"The skill you need most is something that's transferable," she said. "You're not there to tell them what to do — but to work along with them so that when you leave, they can continue without you."

Bowersox arrived in Jamaica on June 1, 1988. She said her first experience in the country involved a six-weeks training period, during which she learned the economic, political and educational systems of the country. She said the training period is very important because it allows a person time to adjust to the conditions of the country. One of the things she had to learn was to slow down to adjust to the pace of the people in Jamaica. During this period, she lived with a women in her 40s and her granddaughter, who served as her host family. . . .

After her six-week introduction period was completed, Bowersox was given her primary job assignment. She said this required her to lecture on teaching techniques on reading and children's literature in the language arts department of Sam Sharpe Teachers' College in Granville, near Montego Bay. Her students were teachers, ranging in age from 22 to 58, who wanted to learn creative and innovative teaching skills.

Bowersox explained that rote learning (repetition) is the primary teaching method in Jamaica. . . . One of the reasons rote method is used so much, Bowersox explained, is because classroom conditions are so difficult in Jamaica. She said that school rooms are usually no bigger than eight feet by 20 feet, with an average of 62 students per class. The students sit on rows of benches, with 10 to a bench and only one teacher for instruction. These rooms are only separated with bulletin boards, which do not go all the way to the ceiling.

She said her job was to convince the Jamaican teachers to accept the idea that it is all right to use different teaching methods. . . . In addition, she also fulfilled several secondary assignments as a Peace Corps volunteer. She set up a play production program in one of the region's hospitals for sick and abandoned children, and established story hours at several schools. Another project involved putting together a summer camp for underprivileged children.

One of the most popular of her secondary assignments was the Youth Club Marching Band. In addition to teaching marching, she also taught the students things they needed for social and academic development. Bowersox said she found her experiences in Jamaica very rewarding. She said that during her second year as a

Parents' Fund gifts help to update library

Parents of full-time, undergraduate students are being called and asked to pledge to the Library Fund of the Trust for Generations. To date, pledges of approximately $80,000 indicate parents' commitment to taking the extra measure of helping to assure that all BU students have access to an up-to-date library.

Co-chairs for the 1990 Parents' Fund are John and Camille Manfredonia of Yardley. They have two daughters at BU: Karen, a junior majoring in secondary education, and Jean-Marie, a freshman majoring in studio art.

"The Manfredonias are a great asset to the Parents' Fund campaign by setting a giving example themselves and, through their letter to all parents, encouraging them to help support the library," said Anthony Iannero, assistant vice president for development.

The 1990 freshmen class parents who fulfill pledges of $100 each year for four years will have their names and the names of their sons and daughters engraved on a wall plaque which will be displayed in Andruss Library.

43% of Class of 1990 make 'Give Five' pledges to university

For the first time in the history of the school, a senior class has made a commitment prior to graduation to support the university. "I believe I can speak for the members of my class by saying that we felt this was the most appropriate time to show our commitment to the university and the Trust for Generations campaign," said Jim Shevlin, president of the Class of 1990. Forty-three percent of those seniors contacted pledged to the program.

"Give Five" is the vehicle designed to address the financial situation of the graduating student. Senior class members were asked to pledge a gift of $100 over a five-year period. One year after graduation, seniors will make their first payment of $10 gift to BU — $5 supports the Annual Fund and $5 supports a class scholarship. The following four years, class members pledged to increase their gift by $5 annually.

"We hope this gift will set the standard for future classes to follow," Shevlin said. "The 'Give Five' program gives our class the opportunity to do something we would not be able to do alone. At the end of the five-year pledge period, the Class of 1990 will have funded an endowed scholarship enabling us to offer our own scholarship to selected students. I personally want to thank my classmates for their involvement in this effort."

President Harry Ansprich praised the class for their contribution. "This gift is deeply appreciated," he said. "The motivation to help make things happen at the university even after leaving is the cement that keeps this university strong. We have a strong university family. Our alumni, both young and old, are devoted to what has been created here.

"As I look back over the past five years of my presidency, I am pleased to see that our university programs are better than ever," Ansprich said. "This is because of people, people like our graduating seniors, who care deeply and show this with their financial support of our students, our facilities and our faculty."

SPECIAL EDITION

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

TODAY, OUR STUDENTS have a set of world circumstances and choices that are in many respects the most complex of any generation. Preparing all of our students for the future, and thus fulfilling the mission of Bloomsburg University, is becoming an increasingly challenging task. As a university community, we not only need to keep abreast of new developments and research and an ever expanding information base, but we must also respond with greater flexibility and creativity as we seek to prepare students for situations that may be well beyond the realm of our present experience. By way of preparing our students, we must better prepare ourselves. Through careful thought and discussions we are making progress in enhancing the teaching/learning experience for all of us. Through careful planning and assessment we are strengthening our programs and services. And to support these initiatives, we are engaged in activities to improve the university's resources.

Bloomsburg University's long history of planning has placed the institution in an enviable position — in spite of our current budget situation in the state, we are fiscally sound; we are able to meet our enrollment goals; and, in general, we enjoy an excellent reputation as an institution of higher education. Bloomsburg received national recognition last year when it was cited as one of the best values in higher education by Money magazine. The magazine's 1990 "America's Best College Buys" survey ranked Bloomsburg 30th out of more than 400 public colleges and universities nationwide. Among the 17 academic criteria used in the survey were class rank and SAT scores of incoming freshmen, graduation rate, and student-faculty ratio. This past year, as part of the continuing implementation of Robert Shirley's planning model, a report titled "Strategic Direction Statements for Bloomsburg University 1990 Through 1999" was developed and adopted. These statements in conjunction with the mission and Priorities documents of the State System of Higher Education, the "University Mission Statement" and "University Goals and Subgoals" will serve to guide and direct our general activities and broadly define what it is we want to accomplish. Using the recommendations for the next step in the Shirley model, a program/service mix task force, which was established last fall, has been charged to assess the university's programs and services and to identify the respective strengths and weaknesses. The committee will report its findings next fall.

The university community undertook another very important planning activity last year which involved looking at all of our broad, long-range plans; postulating some assumptions about the future; and then, designing a Five-Year Plan. Academic affairs led this initiative by developing its plan first, and then all other areas — student life, general administration and university advancement — developed their plans in support of the academic mission. This Five-Year Plan, along with our already established four-year affirmative action plan, gives us the incremental steps we will need to meet our long-range goals.

Our diverse academic programs are central to Bloomsburg University's mission, and they continue to remain strong. However, departments are working with limited operating and equipment budgets. Additional resources will be required to ensure successful implementation of the plans for maintaining and, in some cases, building more quality into our programs.

Multi-cultural education continues to be a vital component of our academic program. Last year, Bloomsburg University sent its first two students to Sheffield, England, in conjunction with an exchange program with Sheffield University, and signed a four-year agreement initiating a faculty exchange program with China's Shenyang College of Economics and Finance. The university signed a statement of understanding with the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences which focuses on the possibility of faculty and student exchange programs, mutual research projects, and possible cultural exchange programs. These programs are part of a growing number of opportunities available to faculty and students.

Extending the academic environment beyond the classroom is an important part of the university's mission. Last year Francine Du Plessix Gray presented "Inside Russia Today: Through the Eyes of Soviet Women" as part of the Provost's Lecture Series. Other university-sponsored activities included a study tour of the Soviet Union; a panel discussion on the Persian Gulf situation, sponsored by the Bloomsburg University Curriculum Committee; and a special mini-course on the Civil War, including a tour of the Gettysburg Battlefield. These activities, along with scores of others, have helped our students synthesize and apply their knowledge.

FACULTY RESEARCH AND SCHOLARLY ACTIVITY, A major aspect of professional development, is vital to enhancing and stimulating the academic climate. The university received nearly $1.4 million in total grant funding during the 1989-90 academic year. This represents an increase of about 23 percent over the previous year. The improving funding rate of our external grant projects points to a growing faculty and staff commitment to conducting more research and improving teaching at the university.

By way of enhancing, complementing, and completing the teaching/learning experience, faculty continue to involve their students in research and scholarly activity. As noted in the university's strategic direction statements, this experience helps expose students to research excellence in their chosen disciplines. Opportunities for research-related activity last year included a six-week, summer archaeological field-school project directed by Bloomsburg anthropology professor Dee Anne Wymer. Wymer is affiliated with the Murphy Archaeological Research Group that discovered the complete skeleton of a mastodon in December of 1989 in the remains of a glacial bog in the Licking valley of central Ohio. Wymer received a $1,000 Margin of Excellence Award for the 1990 fieldschool project, which involved students in excavations at a ceremonial site in central Ohio and the investigation of the glacial bog and its mastodon. Pamela Wynn, associate professor of marketing and management, collaborated with Wymer on a proposal which received a $5,000 Minority Faculty Retention Grant from the State System of Higher Education in 1990. The matching grant with Bloomsburg University will fund a $10,000 Minority Faculty Fellowship to help junior faculty in advancement and promotion at Bloomsburg. In other activities, students, under the supervision of math and computer science professor Paul Hartung, helped two regional manufacturing companies in CAD/CAM projects, and College of Business students prepared an in-depth plan for a new local business.

A college education does more than prepare students for a career. As stated in the Priorities document, the continuing emphasis on liberal education as the focus of undergraduate general education requirements ensures that all students will have the opportunity to attain the best possible "foundation for further learning, for professional practice and for enriched quality of life."

Dr. Harry Ausprich
President

"Quality," in the words of Ernest L. Boyer, "is not divisible. It touches every aspect of the institution." Last year, a number of developments, including the changes in Hartline Science Center, contributed to the enhancement of the academic environment. A new computer lab and several faculty offices were added in Hartline this year, and as renovations in this building continue in 1991, new teaching labs and additional office space will be made available. The $3.3 million renovation of Old Science Hall was completed and provides an aesthetically engaging and more functional space for several academic departments. Safety modifications began in Haas Center for the Arts and construction of the dining service extension was completed. The Board of Governors approved an $8.7 million project to expand and renovate the Kehr Union. All of these projects are visible indicators of the standard of quality we have set for ourselves. They are designed to enhance our physical plant and our ability to deliver programs and services.

FOREMOST ON OUR LIST OF continuing needs for additional space — along with offices and classrooms — is a new library facility. Although Bloomsburg University has the fourth largest full-time equivalent enrollment of the 14 State System universities, it ranks 14th in both the percent of seating space in its library and the net library square footage per student. As part of our appeal for the release of funding for this building, I met with State System officials, members of the legislature and the Budget Secretary. Many faculty, staff, students, alumni, parents of students, and university friends have joined in our campaign and have written to the governor and other officials to build legislative support for this much needed facility.

Creating a supportive climate and providing the resources necessary to do one's job are quite important. This past year, issues relating to class size were a prime concern to both faculty and management. An analysis of data presented to the Budget Subcommittee revealed that on a university-wide level, the average student credit hours per instructional full-time equivalent faculty has been very stable over the past six years. However, the average load for some departments and some individual faculty members has varied significantly. The provost, college deans, and department chairpersons have reviewed the data and have done much to solve the problem areas. A new, on-line Course Scheduling System and Curriculum Advisement and Progress System, field-tested in the College of Business last spring, enabled business faculty to incorporate students' course requests in the scheduling process for the 1990-91 academic year. In the future, faculty in all three colleges, including Professional Studies and Arts and Sciences, will use the two-part system. The Curriculum Advisement and Progress System helps students match courses they have already completed with requirements for the selected degree programs.

The university does not plan any significant enrollment growth until substantial capital and operating funds are made available to serve additional students. We continue to show progress in the recruitment of students and faculty of color. Last year, we exceeded our goal for the recruitment of African-American students, and the total complement of faculty and staff of color increased. The disparity in the retention rates of African-American and Hispanic students in relation to Caucasian students decreased.

As we continue to develop better teaching and training methods to prepare African-American, Latino and disadvantaged individuals for the nation's workforce in the 21st century, I am reminded of the words ethnic diversity specialist Samuel Betances spoke one evening during a Provost's Lecture Series program. The chief responsibility of the modern university is that it "realizes it must universalize the human spirit. For the first time, we have to educate everybody." Likewise, the State System envisions the university as the place "where boundaries between academic disciplines, between in-class and out-of-class learning, between teaching and research, between the campus and the community and between Pennsylvania and the rest of the world are blurred — a university in which students and faculty alike are actively involved in learning and where collaboration among individuals and groups has become a way of life." While funding will be critical in realizing this goal, as emphasized in the Priorities document, "leadership, creativity, caring and commitment" will be even more important.

One big step Bloomsburg University has taken toward transforming this vision into a reality is to develop a partnership with the Harrisburg City School District. Through an Urban Initiatives Program, we hope to provide some unique academic opportunities for our students and teachers. Under the agreement, Bloomsburg faculty will conduct professional development workshops for Harrisburg's urban school teachers; and admissions and financial aid personnel will work with guidance counselors and principals to help prepare inner-city youth for college admissions processes. Student teaching opportunities for Bloomsburg students will be significantly enhanced and field experiences in the Harrisburg schools will be continued for Bloomsburg University students.

ON CAMPUS, AN INCREASING number of faculty and staff are planning programs to strengthen our commitment to cultural diversity. The list of sponsors alone includes: the Counseling Center, the colleges of Professional Studies and Business, the Curriculum and Foundations Department, Kappa Delta Pi, the Campus-wide Committee on Human Relations, the Orientation Office, the Celebrity Artist Series, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Martin Luther King, Jr. Observance Day Committee, the Bloomsburg University Scholars Symposium, the Affirmative Action Office, University Advancement and the Office of the President. Not only is the list of sponsors growing, but so is the list of events. Robert Larson, a specialist in the history of warfare, joined Bloomsburg University history professor Walter Howard for a question and answer session following the screening of "Glory;" Robert Pipkin, principal of the Prospect "3-M" Center for Multi-racial, Multi-ethnic, and Multi-cultural Education, conducted three presentations on multi-cultural education by the year 2000; author Brian McNaught lectured on "Being Gay in a Straight World;" C. Ariel Stone spoke on the history of the Jewish people; and the Chief of the Cherokee Nation, Wilma Mankiller, presented a public lecture as part of the Provost's Lecture Series. Other activities included: a teleconference, "Governor's Conference on Responses to Workforce 2000: The Challenge and Opportunities;" a performance by the Harlem Spiritual Ensemble; the observation of Women's History Month; and a theatrical presentation of historical figures performed by the Willow Grove NAACP Youth Council. In addition, a workshop titled "Creating an Inclusive Community" was conducted to help individuals better understand the barriers to inclusivity and how to make such groups as women, African Americans, individuals with physical disabilities, Latinos, internationals, gays and lesbians and individuals who hold unpopular political views be more fully integrated in society. As these programs illustrate, more and more the concept of inclusivity is becoming part of our thinking, part of what we do, part of us.

THE STUDENT LIFE PLAYS AN INtegral part in the university-wide endeavor to model principles and beliefs that are an essential part of our culture. "Honesty and integrity, professionalism and high ethical standards, and social responsibility," as stated in the "Strategic Direction Statements," are values we as a university community attempt to instill in our students.

Topics such as social responsibility and respect for others were addressed during new student orientation, in residence halls, Interfraternity and Intersorority councils, and Student Senate meetings. Fraternity and sorority pledges met with the education director of the Town of Bloomsburg's Women's Center to discuss acquaintance rape and other forms of sexual violence. Discussions on these topics were conducted by the Community Government Association (CGA) to usher in CGA Safety and Awareness Week. In October, Alcohol Awareness Week was observed as part of the university's ongoing efforts to curb alcohol abuse.

Another new initiative last year was the Leadership Development Program for freshmen. Sixty-four students completed the 30-hour program which was facilitated by the student life staff. In addition to preparing students for campus leadership positions, the program has helped to develop students who are better equipped to be of service to the larger community.

Our efforts to encourage students to become involved in service have expanded through a dynamic volunteerism program. Students, faculty, and staff have touched the lives of thousands of people in dozens of significant ways. Husky Habitat, the university's chapter of Habitat for Humanity, helped refurbish a home in Bloomsburg for a Vietnamese family and assisted in rebuilding homes that were destroyed by Hurricane Hugo in South Carolina. Resident students volunteered to support the Area Agency on Aging in its food giveaway program. Hundreds of Bloomsburg University students, faculty, and staff contributed to the American Red Cross blood drive. A week-long day camp for children with asthma, sponsored by the American Lung Association, received the proceeds from the "Clean Air Week Walk-A-Thon." Volunteers helped 80 disadvantaged sixth, seventh, and eighth grade Bloomsburg Middle School students gain a new outlook on life through SHARE — Students Helping Adolescents Reach Excellence. Other activities included a sleep-out to aid the Last year, Bloomsburg University sent its first two students to Sheffield, England, in conjunction with an exchange program with Sheffield University, and signed a four-year agreement initiating a faculty exchange program with China's Shenyang College of Economics and Finance.

Currently, more than $3.4 million has been received in cash, pledges, planned gifts, and we fully expect the campaign will be completed well ahead of schedule. In 1990, the Bloomsburg University Foundation received contributions totaling more than $1.6 million from alumni, university faculty and staff, BU parents, friends, businesses and corporations.

homelessness, Fishing Creek Green Alliance Creek Cleanup for Earth Day 1990, and an Amnesty International Write-Off.

Because of the success of the students' volunteer efforts, Bloomsburg was chosen by the Pennsylvania Campus Compact last fall to participate in a news conference in Harrisburg highlighting volunteerism on university campuses.

FACULTY AND STAFF CONTINUE to receive recognition for their significant achievements at the state and national level. Last March, Howard K. Macauley, dean of the College of Professional Studies, was recognized by the Association of Teacher Educators as one of 70 leaders in teacher education across the nation. In November, an exhibit of photographic portraits of "Paramount Chiefs of Sierra Leone" by art professor Vera Viditz-Ward opened at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of African Art in Washington, DC, and will run through Sept. 2, 1991. Linda LeMura, assistant professor of health, physical education and athletics, worked with a team of exercise physiologists to help U.S. Olympic biathlon hopefuls improve their competitive edge last October in Lake Placid. Last fall English professor Susan Rusinko and curriculum and foundations professor Charlotte M. Hess received Excellence in Teaching Awards, presented for the first time this year by the State System of Higher Education. Sandra Walker, coordinator of orientation, was recognized as an outstanding advocate for freshmen at the national First-Year Experience Conference in Columbia, S.C. Burt Reese, assistant director of athletics and coach of the men's tennis team, was named 1990 "Coach of the Year" by the Middle States Tennis Association. The women's field hockey team, under coach Jan Hutchinson, won its fifth Pennsylvania Conference championship and placed second in the final NCAA Division II rankings. Walter Brasch, mass communications professor and author of several books, had a book "Forerunners of Revolution: Muckrakers and the American Social Conscience" published by Roman and Littlefield in Washington, D.C. Mehdi Haririan, associate professor of economics, had a book "State-owned Enterprises in a Mixed Economy — Micro Versus Macro Economic Objectives" published by Westview Press, Inc., in Boulder, Colo. And, because of the collective talents of our staff and faculty, the university won two national awards, a bronze for public relations publications improvement, and a silver for the university's 1989 environmental symposium and teleconference titled "Global Change and Our Endangered Environment: From Pennsylvania to Planet Earth," in the 1990 Recognition Program of the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE). As part of the university's commitment to public service, a video documentary, "Everything You Do (Can Make a Difference)," was produced "to show people that there are positive things they can do that will make a difference in the environment." The documentary evolved from Bloomsburg's environmental symposium and teleconference, "Global Change and Our Endangered Environment: From Pennsylvania to Planet Earth," produced as part of the university's 150th anniversary celebration. Five Pennsylvania Public TV stations plan to air the documentary this spring. These are just a few of the many accomplishments of faculty and staff during 1990. (Others are listed on page 3 of the April 11 issue of The Communique under "Campus Notes.")

To show our appreciation to faculty and staff for their years of service to Bloomsburg, university officials presented 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30-year awards to more than 300 employees during the institution's first Employee Recognition Day. Because of its significance, Employee Recognition Day will be held annually.

Providing an extra margin of quality for our academic programs and services is the primary objective of our development staff's efforts to seek private funding. More than $10 million has been raised during the past five years for scholarships, alumni programs, faculty and staff development, library and learning resources, equipment acquisitions, the arts, speakers and programs. The Trust for Generations campaign was initiated in 1989 to raise $3.5 million by 1994 for the Library Fund, the Scholarship Fund, and the Academic Excellence Fund. Currently, more than $3.4 million has been received in cash, pledges, planned gifts, and we fully expect the campaign will be completed well ahead of schedule. In 1990, the Bloomsburg University Foundation received contributions totaling more than $1.6 million from alumni, university faculty and staff, BU parents, friends, businesses and corporations.

During the past five and a half years, I have frequently commented on the strong positive indicators of institutional health which exist at Bloomsburg. Specifically, I have noted our strong enrollment, excellent student retention, success in placing our graduates, and our stable fiscal position. Although our progress and achievements have been significant, 1991 will bring major challenges in each of these areas.

Demographics indicate there will be a smaller pool of high school graduates, thus requiring increased attention to our enrollment management area. Besides effectively competing in a shrinking pool of traditional students, we will need to increase our efforts to provide opportunities for non-traditional students.

To ensure that non-traditional students have access to higher education, the university acquired two new sources of financial aid last year: a $34,000 state grant through the Act 101 program, which allows for 50 persons to be admitted as part-time degree students; and a new scholarship program, which was established for non-traditional students through a $100,000 gift from former student Kenneth Gross.

Though our overall retention has remained solid, we have much work to do in improving our retention of minority students. Creating an even more supportive campus climate and effectively addressing the academic and social needs of our minority population will require our best thinking and continued commitment to cultural diversity issues.

In the area of placement for our graduates, we face an increasingly competitive job market. We will continue to encourage businesses, industries, and graduate schools to recruit Bloomsburg graduates.

Perhaps the most serious challenge in our immediate future is a fiscal one. Pennsylvania's recent reduction in allocations to state-owned universities means that our creativity in managing the institution will be further tested. Maintaining the integrity of academic programs will be central to our fiscal management decisions, and funding for academic equipment, faculty recruitment, and deferred maintenance will continue to be priorities in our planning.

THOUGH THERE IS REASON FOR watchfulness, our history of good planning, and specifically the planning decisions made during the past year, has placed the university in a very positive position. I am confident we will not simply weather the state's current budget deficit, we will continue to grow in our ability to provide a quality education to those we serve.

McCormick advocates public support for education

By JOAN T. LENTCZNER

On Monday, April 15, three days before the State System's Board of Governors voted to support Gov. Robert P. Casey's request to give back $18.1 million from this year's fiscal budget earmarked for college education, James McCormick expressed his concern about the impact this cut would have on the State System of Higher Education.

During an hour-long interview, the chancellor whose vision has guided the State System since it was established in 1983, sat at one end of a long conference table as he spoke. "But for discussion purposes," he says, "I think we ought to mention there are two levels of cuts." The second, McCormick explains, is the "zero recommended increase" for the State System's Educational and General Appropriations in Gov. Robert P. Casey's proposed 1991-92 Commonwealth Budget presented to the General Assembly on Feb. 5.

"We need to keep those (levels of cuts) separate," McCormick emphasizes. As for his first concern, the 14 universities in the State System, including Bloomsburg, "have been conservatively managed, and I believe that they have developed plans to adjust to the possible cuts for this year. But that's been done at a heavy cost."

For Bloomsburg, the Board's action will require a $1.3 million reduction in the university's 1990-91 budget, says President Harry Ausprich. Reductions, which have been planned for since January, "will be achieved by leaving vacant positions unfilled for the remainder of this fiscal period, eliminating non-essential travel, energy conservation measures, and utilizing university fuel and contingency reserves," he says. "Although the short term effects can be accommodated without seriously damaging academic programs, a continuing budget shortfall would adversely affect our ability to maintain quality in the programs and services we provide to our students."

The decision of the Board, Ausprich notes, "was made in a spirit of cooperation to assist the Commonwealth" in its efforts to reduce the state government budget deficit of more than $731 million.

Although the reductions System-wide "would mean delays in equipment purchases, delays in the purchase of the library and not doing some maintenance work that needs to be done," the 14 universities "will for the most part have balanced budgets," says McCormick.

"But I'm even more concerned about the "zero increase," which translates into a "$38 million dollar shortfall from where the Board of Governors would like us to be this next year." This cut "would be very difficult to handle," he adds. "The reason for the existence of our institutions is to provide high quality education at the lowest possible cost to the students. If you cut the costs and try to operate on less funds, it is going to influence negatively the quality." On the other hand, if tuition must increase significantly, "then our affordable side gets out of balance even more than it is already."

"How does the current budget crisis differ from the one you faced as president of Bloomsburg in the '70s?" Before answering the question, he reflects on his 32 years of service in the system, including six years in the public schools and 10 years as president of Bloomsburg preceding his appointment as chancellor. "I don't ever recall when we had a cut in one year followed by a zero recommended increase. During one year at Bloomsburg, he recalls, "we went through some difficult times. In those days, we were under the auspices of the Department of Education, and we were given orders to retrench 'X' number of people at all the campuses. The positive difference this time is the fact that our presidents, along with their academic communities and their councils of trustees, have more flexibility on how to cope with the reductions." Under the State System, "presidents have a good deal of autonomy on how to cope with the financial situation. Another advantage is that our institutions are in such demand. During the earlier crisis period, a number of the enrollments were fragile."

Today, there is a "strong demand for services offered by our universities," he says. In addition, "there is increased respect for these institutions. In the last eight years, we've moved from our ability to admit 80 percent of those who apply to 60 percent. However, we're concerned about those who may not have the ability to attend college. Enrollment in the 14 universities has increased from 76,000 to 99,000 students. I believe that most Pennsylvanians believe that these institutions, with a long tradition, are getting better and better all the time.

"The critical challenge we face today," emphasizes McCormick, "is not to lose the support we need. I hope that the strong demands for what we have to offer will cause legislators, taxpayers and citizens to recognize that their investment in the development of human resources is critical not only to the quality of life but also the economic revitalization of the state, and that this recognition will cause governors and other leaders to do what they have to do to provide financial support for higher education."

McCormick's role as an advocate for public support of higher education goes above and beyond his duties as chief executive officer of the 18th largest employer of the Commonwealth. The chancellor — who is appointed by the Board of Governors — and his senior staff, including the vice chancellor of academic affairs, the vice chancellor for finance and administration, the vice chancellor for employee and labor relations and the new vice chancellor for advancement, a recently created position, are housed in the white, narrow, nine-story Kunkel Building on Market Street in downtown Harrisburg.

In addition to Bloomsburg, the other universities in the System include: California, Cheyney, Clarion, East Stroudsburg, Edinboro, Indiana, Kutztown, Lock Haven, Mansfield, Millersville, Shippensburg, Slippery Rock and West Chester.

In response to the question, "How much time are you spending on advocacy right now with the current budget crunch?," McCormick reaches for the booklet on the table in front of him. "While we're going forward with all of the duties spelled out in this booklet," titled Act 188 of 1982, Enabling Legislation for the State System of Higher Education, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, he says, "it doesn't say a thing in here about advocacy in terms of charge other than the purpose of the system is high quality, affordable education. So, this whole advocacy role is just another responsibility of the chief executive officer in the system."

The chancellor admits his number one priority right now is advocacy. "There is hardly a thing I do right now that doesn't relate to that," he says. McCormick recounts how he and some of his staff spent the previous Thursday in Edinboro, starting with a breakfast meeting where he briefed the Edinboro University administration and area legislators on the System's appropriation needs. Moving through the day, he discussed these same needs in separate sessions with alumni, faculty, staff, students, the media, including three television stations the night before, other university members, and business and community leaders of Erie. In fact, this spring he will conduct legislative briefings and sessions with alumni, faculty, staff, students, the media and business and community leaders on all 14 campuses.

On the morning of the interview, McCormick appeared on television with a legislator from Chester County to promote the strengths of the universities. The success of his efforts to build public support for higher education "will relate to the degree in which the family of this university system becomes involved," he says, implying his "small central staff" can only do so much. "We are loaded with all these functions that have very little to do with advocacy. In Act 188, you will see very clearly we have very detailed duties, such as strategic planning and personnel and fiscal and resource management, that must be carried out by the staff."

McCormick commends one important advocacy group in the "family" of the university system. The Board of Governors was an advocate when it passed the State System's budget appropriation request for 1991-92 last October. To be specific, "the Board recommended $400 million in Educational and General Appropriations for 1991-92 — a $38 million increase over what we're getting this year. In addition, it recommended a number of initiatives, including deferred maintenance, affirmative action, instructional equipment and telecommunication, the Pennsylvania Academy for the Profession of Teaching, library enhancement, State System incentive grants, the Keystone State College, the Rural Scholars program, the Labor Studies Institute and the Community College Transfer program. And I would argue that this appropriation request represents all the work that goes into making the case to support these universities."

McCormick reflects for a moment over his administration at Bloomsburg from 1973-83 and before that, his eight-year tenure with Shippensburg University, where he taught in the Department of Education and Psychology, before serving as Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs, Assistant to the President and Vice President for Administration — and now in the chancellor's office. "When you look over those years, you will see one of the hallmarks of the way I like to do business is to develop a plan, a strategic plan or a list of priorities that we will work to accomplish."

In fact, the State System has recently published a 48-page booklet titled Priorities, prepared by the 1989-90 Planning Commission, including Bloomsburg's vice president for university advancement John Walker.

In response to the question, "What is your vision for the System five years from now?," McCormick says the Priorities document "will give you insight into my vision." Then he proceeds to address four major priorities. "These are in no particular order," he says.

"We must improve the quality of the physical facilities of this university system. A significant infusion of cash, at least $500 million is needed; we must find creative ways for bringing the 718 academic buildings and libraries on 4,000 acres up to current standards, to change some of the buildings that need to be renovated for new missions and do some additional construction, including the library at Bloomsburg. We've solved the problems with residence halls, dining halls and student unions in the past two years because the Board had the authority to float bonds."

The chancellor's voice is fuller and more impassioned than any other time during the interview as he moves on to the next priority, the access issue. "We must recognize the importance of serving additional populations of students who are not now being served: rural Pennsylvanians and urban Pennsylvanians. Statistics show six out of 10 rural Pennsylvanians do not have the opportunity to attend college compared to four out of ten individuals in the suburban communities who do not have the opportunity to attend college. The Latino and African-American communities in the inner cities, including Philadelphia and Pittsburgh as well as Reading, Allentown and Bethlehem, are not participating at the same rate. So if this state is going to be competitive in the next century, we need to reach students who have the ability but for various reasons do not have the financial ability to attend college."

Next, he says, "we must improve the quality of teaching. We must value undergraduate teaching. We do this very well now — that's why we're successful. That isn't to say we don't have a research mission or a public service mission. But the university system will continue to distinguish itself and be successful if we emphasize quality undergraduate teaching."

In the future, McCormick says, "these universities will only be as good as the quality of people we're able to recruit and retain. Not only does this include outstanding faculty and administrators but also excellent non-instructional people. Just as businesses and other segments of society will be facing a shortage of quality people in the future so will this university system. So, high on the agenda has to be our very best efforts to recruit and retain as well as a concern for the professional development of all of our people. We must find creative ways to help them stay on the razor's edge."

All of these priorities will take a high degree of fiscal support, "first from citizens of the Commonwealth who value investment in education," says the chancellor. "I'm hoping our advancement efforts will mature and develop over a period of time so that there is increasing support from the private sector, including alumni and others."

Although he's devoting all his energy to work on the current dilemmas and challenges the state's ailing economy poses, McCormick stresses, "we can't lose sight of long range view — the vision. I start every meeting with the presidents and staff by reminding them of our priorities so we don't get bogged down with the immediate problems."

The Priorities report is a "living document designed to keep us focused on our thinking. Some of the recommendations in this report don't have answers yet — we have to find those together," he says.

In spite of the difficult budget situation, the chancellor says, "I've not for a moment lost my enthusiasm. I've watched this office. We do better in tough times. There's something about this system. Maybe it's the fact we've had hard battles all along. We are evolving institutions, changing our missions, growing in respect and reputation. It's amazing to me how many of the good people in the System look upon these current difficulties as a challenge."

'Killing Fields' co-author says Cambodian people still suffer, need help

A survivor of the "Cambodian holocaust," Dith Pran is a powerful reminder of Khmer Rouge atrocities and a civil war that continues in a country ruled by a coalition government.

The inspiration for and co-author of the award-winning film, "The Killing Fields," brought the painful reality of his war-torn homeland, Cambodia, to campus as a speaker in the Provost's Lecture Series.

"I am not a hero, nor am I a politician," said Pran. "I am a messenger whose mission is to tell the world that Cambodian people still suffer and need help."

Today, Vietnam and Soviety-aligned communists control a 12-member Supreme National Council that includes members from the Khmer Rouge and two non-communist factions. The coalition is a constant affront to survivors of the holocaust.

"The Cambodian people who love justice cannot understand why these criminals are coming back to share power," he said.

The civil war and world immigration policies have also resulted in as many as 300,000 Cambodian refugees "trapped between the East and West," he noted. Another effect has been a Western trade embargo that only serves to punish "the real people, not the leadership."

The United States, said Pran, provides non-lethal aid such as food and medicine to support the Khmer Rouge. He urged his audience to use their voices to spread his message and help stop support of coalition and the war.

"The Khmer Rouge survives because we support the coalition that supports them," he said.

Students favor construction of new recreation center; feasibility study next step

By a referendum vote of 378 to 301, BU students approved construction of a proposed 80,000-square-foot recreation center. Estimated to cost $6.34 million, the newly proposed center, including an indoor running track, nautilus equipment, and basketball and racquetball courts, would be built on a site east of the tennis courts.

The recreation center would ease the overcrowded conditions that currently exist at Centennial Gymnasium and Nelson Field House, said Joel Tolbert, president of the Community Government Association.

Construction and operation of the center would be paid by student fees, said Dr. John J. Trathen, director of student activities. Students, who voted on a $60 fee increase per semester in the referendum, will begin paying the additional fee in the fall of 1992 when construction is scheduled to begin.

However, the next step is a feasibility study that will cost approximately $26,000. The CGA has approved funding for this study through the student reserve account.

"When the study is completed, we'll report the findings to the Council of Trustees at their next quarterly meeting in June," said Trathen. If approved by the university's trustees, the council must then seek final approval from the State System's Board of Governors before the project can proceed.

Trathen noted some students voted against the recreation center because they believe other projects, such as building a new library, are more important. "I agree with these students that a library is more important, but what some of our students don't understand is that we are not permitted to have a student referendum for an educational facility."

The State System does not consider construction or renovation of "auxiliary" buildings — such as recreation centers, residence halls, and student unions — to be "priority projects," he noted. "The State System feels an obligation to provide educational facilities, such as classroom buildings and libraries."

AT PRE-MATCH BUFFET — Roger Sanders (center), head wrestling coach, is shown with two BU alumni, Dr. Harold J. "Pat" O'Brien '35 (left) and Ken Trometter '73, at a pre-meet buffet held at Nittany Lion Inn prior to the BU-PSU contest. They were still smiling after the meet, too, because the Huskies beat Penn State for the second year in a row. Also attending the buffet were Mark McCauslin '81, J. C. Collins, Craig Helmut, John Baird, Marsha Baird, Matt Baird, Patrick Finnucan, Brian Willoughby, Roy Willoughby, George Troutman, Anthony Ianirro, Frank Bedosky, Joy Bedosky, Marilyn Muehlhof, Louis Muehlhof, Erin Everett, Kim Kerlin, Judge Jay W. 'You are our only hope,' poet tells students during Provost's Lecture

Poet Nikki Giovanni gave her BU audience some generous gifts — poetry, good humor and optimism for the 21st century — as the first speaker in the Provost's Lecture Series.

"Optimism is logical. If we're going to despair, what is the point of coming together?" the prolific author and civil rights advocate asked.

"I know we are a better people than what we appear to be. We have learned to transcend those who pull us down," she said. Extolling the power of an education in the age of information, Giovanni repeatedly stressed to the students in the audience, "You are our only hope. We expect a little more from you because you've been given a little more. If you're choosing to be here, you have an obligation.

"Happiness comes from what you give, not what you take. I try to be as generous with myself as I can," she said.

"Planet Earth needs help," she said, imploring her audience to "accept and embrace the agony that it is to be a human being. It is painful to know that some child is going to be hungry. We need to go beyond that pain.

"We face not only global, but also galactic challenges in the next century. We need to be prepared to live together on earth so we can in fact be prepared to live together in the galaxy."

Food service facility on upper campus named by trustees

A food service facility which opened last fall on the upper campus has officially been named "Monty's" by the university's Council of Trustees.

"'Monty's' was built to accommodate students who live in the Montgomery Apartment Complex," said Jennie Carpenter, assistant vice president for residence life, referring to the new student housing units contructed on the upper campus two years ago. "The facility is an extension of the university's food service operation."

Soviet women face triple burdens as workers and mothers

Liberation has been a double-edged sword for Soviet women. Today they face the painful reality that the "dream of equality" offered in the 1917 Russian Revolution is "as empty as the shelves" in their stores.

The story is eloquently told in Soviet Women: Walking the Tightrope, a novel by Francine du Plessix Gray. The French-born author shared her research at a BU Provost's Lecture.

The openness of glastnost underscores the "inequities and arcane prejudices facing Soviet women, but it has not created much of a difference yet."

Today the average Soviet woman earns only two-thirds the income as that of the average Soviet man. Women, she said, hold two-thirds of the construction jobs and 09 percent of the janitorial and street-cleaning positions. Two-thirds of the physicians are women, but medicine is one of the nation's lowest paying professions. Men hold more than half of the hospital administrative positions, she added.

The USSR continues to take a utilitarian approach to women. "Women are needed as both producers and reproducers," she stressed. As a result, women face triple burdens — a necessity to work, the demands of raising a family, and a "shoddy system of human services" that fails to provide adequate child care, birth control and gynecological services.

The deterioration of the nation's child care system has forced many Soviet women to put their careers on hold, rather than place their children in poorly run day care programs. She rated the Soviet method of educating youth about sex as the second worst of any developed nation. Birth control methods are scarce and unreliable. Statistics indicate that for every birth, seven abortions are performed in the country.

"Severe shortages of basic consumer goods also take their toll," she said. "The average Russian woman spends 40 hours each week cooking cleaning, doing laundry and standing in line for food."

According to Gray, Soviet women are survivors because they maintain "uniquely close" matriarchal and kinship ties. "They possess a strong sense of female superiority, rooted from the contributions made by their mothers and grandmothers during World War II.

But the disparity in self-esteem between Soviet men and women, coupled with an extraordinary lack of verbal communication, serves only to exacerabate the "tension between the sexes. Many Russian women live up to their reputation as iron-willed, steel-tongued, overworked amazons, and they are often as oppressive as they are oppressed."

Challenge to women: 'Nurture Tradition, Foster Change'

"Tradition has privileged only one voice; it has given us, at best, only partial knowledge, yet it has claimed universality, objectivity and absolute truth," said philosophy professor Marjorie Clay during a panel discussion celebrating women's history.

"Until you include the feminine, the feminist perspective, you can't have real truth," she stressed.

Clay was one of four panelists who addressed the discussion topic, "Nurture Tradition, Foster Change," sponsored by the Campus Wide Committee on Human Relations.

Speaking on "Women's Voices, Women's Silences," Mary Badami, chairperson of the department of communication studies, told the group that society and individuals work in a variety of ways "to keep women's voices from being heard."

Such factors not only deprive women of the confidence to acknowledge their voices, but also the time to reflect and to write, and the support and encouragement to gain the necessary education," said Badami.

Jeannette Keith, an associate professor of history, stressed the importance of women's history as part of social history. Stereotypical history focuses on war and politics, dates and names of famous men while ignoring "deep socioeconomic changes" involving work, family life and structure, and the "choices people make and context in which they make them," she said.

"The history of women is history of the majority of the human race," Keith reminded. "Women have been more and done more than men have ever been willing to acknowledge."

Jody Heckman, a junior business administration/management major and a Husky Ambassador, said one measure of the success of the women's movement has been "the ease with which it has been taken for granted" by members of her own generation.

When women possess the attitude that they have "every right" to pursue a career or further their education, that they are not simply being granted privileges, then everyone's attitudes begin to change, she said.

"Our dream is to strike a healthy balance between our private and public lives by having a successful family and a successful career," Heckman noted. "We don't want to change places with men. We want better places for women. We want to create a world in which gender differences are not suppressed but observed and celebrated."

Teacher enjoys 50th year at school

(Reprint from The Catholic Review)

John Plevyak '40 is an institution at Mount Joseph High School, known just as much for his dedication to his coaching duties as he was for his work in the classroom.

This year, at the age of 72, he is celebrating his 50th year on the faculty of the high school which is over a century old itself, founded in 1876.

It's gotten to the point where Mr. Plevyak says of his former students, "I have a lot of their sons in school now."

In the last few years, Mr. Plevyak has been recognized by numerous groups for his contributions. In April 1991 the National Catholic Educational Association plans to give him an award at the group's annual national meeting in Boston. In 1987 he was voted into the Maryland State Athletic Directors Hall of Fame. The archdiocesan Division of Schools also recognized his contributions to Catholic education.

He has slowed down a little. He no longer coaches. But he still teaches — math and typing.

In September 1941 he came to Mount St. Joseph where he began teaching typing, shorthand, bookkeeping, office practice and accounting. Sometimes he also taught European history and ancient history.

He coached varsity and JV soccer, varsity and JV track and JV basketball. During the 1940s the Mount won the MSA varsity soccer championships for seven years in a row. He also coached baseball and the JV team won the MSA championships for three years in the same period.

During one year in that period, the varsity and JV soccer, varsity baseball and JV basketball teams all won MSA championships. He was voted coach of the year by the Sunpapers. Later he served as athletic director between 1960 and 1983.

But even when he coached, he said, he felt it was more important to be a teacher. He was good at it, too. The Xaverian Brothers community named him Teacher of the Year in 1987.

He himself comes from a large family; he is one of 12 children. He and his wife, Phyllis, have five children: Donna, Mary Rebecca, Pamela Ann, Kathryn, and John Patrick.

The Catonsville resident says that what gives him the greatest pleasure is "to be part of so many people who have graduated from the Mount, and they are so successful in life."

He says he finds it a pleasure to see "the fruits of his life" and to have contributed to something.

Charles L. Reiter, principal, says Plevyak is "a very humble, genuine Catholic educator whose spirit has edified us."

The school is planning a celebration for Plevyak on June 8.

Alumnus donates second $100,000 gift to university

Kenneth S. Gross of Bryn Mawr has made a second contribution of $100,000 to his alma mater, Bloomsburg University, as a "lead gift" for renovating the 800-seat auditorium in Carver Hall.

At the March 1991, quarterly meeting of the university's council of trustees, the facility was officially named the "Kenneth S. Gross Auditorium" in honor of the benefactor's generous gifts to the university's mission.

The name of the historic building itself will not be changed.

"The years I spent in Bloomsburg were very special to me," Gross says, recalling close friendships with classmates, faculty and townspeople. "I often think of the close friends that I met while attending school at the university. Now, I have an

'Developments' becomes part of this publication

'Developments,' the newsletter prepared by the Bloomsburg University Development Office for distribution to contributing alumni and friends of the university, will become part of this publication, effective with this issue.

"We believe this will be a more cost-effective way of keeping our alumni and friends aware of the university's fundraising success," said Anthony Ianiero, assistant vice president for development. "With rising production and postage costs, this seemed the prudent thing to do."

This issue of Bloomsburg, the university's publication for alumni and friends, contains the Bloomsburg University Foundation's 1990 Report. The 20-page section includes the names of all contributors from whom gifts were received during the calendar year 1990, as well as other articles related to the university's fundraising efforts.

In the future, these articles about Development Office activities will be printed together on two or three pages reserved for this purpose.

Jan Girton appointed Foundation chairperson

Jan Girton, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the Columbia County Farmers National Bank was appointed Bloomsburg University Foundation chairperson in December. Girton has been a Foundation board member since its reactivation in 1985. Prior to his assuming the position of chair, he served one year as vice chair.

Girton

"We are delighted to have Jan give leadership to the Foundation board," said Anthony M. Ianiero, assistant vice president for development. "Jan has been extremely active in community affairs during his career, and his experience and insight will be valuable assets to the Foundation."

Girton has been with the Columbia County Farmers National Bank since 1985. He resides in Mifflinville with his wife, Joyce. They are the parents of two children.

opportunity to give the university something back."

Anthony Ianiero, assistant vice president for development, said Gross directed his contribution toward phase three of the university's $3.5 million fundraising campaign. "Ken Gross's donation to the Academic Excellence Fund of the university's Trust for Generations campaign will provide the 'lead gift' addressing some of the technical and safety needs of the auditorium," he said, noting that the facility is used frequently each school year to support a variety of academically related programs. Other than an occasional painting of the auditorium, it has been more than 35 years since any modernization has been done to the facility. The Gross gift will be used to improve electrical, sound, lighting, and stage needs.

Gross, who donated $100,000 to the university in December 1989 which helped to create a new student scholarship program, attended Bloomsburg as an undergraduate student from 1970 to 1974. He is past president and owner of Tri-State Alarm Co., Inc.—a retailer of security alarm devices—which he and his brother started in this hometown of Philadelphia in 1977.

During the next 11 years, the Gross brothers opened Tri-State businesses throughout Florida, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. They also owned and operated outlets in the Atlanta, Ga., Baltimore, Md., Memphis, Tenn., and Washington, D.C., metropolitan areas.

Gross, 37, gained sole possession of Tri-State five years ago, however, he sold the business last September to another security systems operation. He presently serves as president of the Kenneth A. Gross Investment Group in Ardmore.

"This gift is from my family," Gross noted. He and his wife, Kristine, reside in Bryn Mawr with their two children.

'Trust' nears $3.5 million goal

Gifts to University surpass $1.6 million

More than $1.6 million was raised in 1990 for the University by the Bloomsburg University Foundation and development office initiatives. A new record of 10,000 gifts was recorded in achieving this total.

"We are deeply grateful to all our alumni and friends who have made 1991 a successful year," said Anthony Ianiero, assistant vice president for development. "Their loyalty is the foundation of our fundraising efforts."

Ianiero

Alumni , the university's largest constituency, gave more than $311,000 to the Annual Fund and The Trust for Generations.

Gifts from parents for The Library Fund jumped from $37,000 in 1989 to more than $66,000 in 1990.

"The commitment from our parents in support of the Trust's Library Fund is very heart-warming," said Ianiero. "Their appreciation for what we are doing for our students, manifested in this level of giving, sets an outstanding example for all to follow."

The Trust for Generations campaign, initiated in 1989 to raise $3.5 million by 1994, for The Library Fund, The Scholarship Fund, and The Academic Excellence Fund, currently has received more than $3.4 million in cash, pledges and planned gifts. It is fully expected the campaign will be completed well ahead of schedule.

Gifts to the Husky Club totalled more than $103,000. This support for student athletic scholarships is reflected within totals for alumni, faculty, staff, friends, and parents.

Planned gifts of $600,000 include wills, trusts, and insurance policies which were transferred to the ownership of the Foundation.

This year, 87 BU students benefited from nearly $179,000 provided by the Fred Smith Golden Rule Trust Fund.

BU students themselves gave $50,000 toward their five-year pledge for the Library Fund for The Trust for Generations campaign. In addition, the Class of 1989 is providing $28,000 in gifts and pledges, and the Class of 1990 has pledged $14,300 to its "Give Five" program.

In-kind gifts totalled nearly $90,000. Contributors included private individuals, local businesses, and large corporations.

Specific amounts and contributions received from other constituencies are listed elsewhere. Any questions may be directed to the development office at 717-389-4128.

Knoebel joins Foundation Board

"You don't have to be the biggest, you only have to be the best."

That philosophy has helped to guide Knoebels Amusement Resort to a premier place among American family parks. This year Barbara Knoebel is adding her own brand of service-oriented wisdom and enthusiasm to a position on the Bloomsburg University Foundation Board.

She brings a fresh perspective honed from years of experience as group sales and catering manager, mother of two sons, and wife of Dick Knoebel, president of Knoebel Lumber and president and co-manager with brother Ron of the family-run park in Elysburg.

Knoebel

The largest free admission park in the United States, Knoebels recently received the first annual 'Spirit Award for Exceptional Achievement in the Art of Creating a Place for Fun' by At the Park magazine.

"It could have gone to Disney or to Six Flags, but instead it came right here to the hills of Pennsylvania. We're proud of that," says Barbara Knoebel, who credits the success to the park's family-oriented, low-key atmosphere.

A Pennsylvania native and graduate of Lykens High School, she worked for an oral surgeon before marrying and turning attention to family and the park operation.

Today her older son Rick is studying industrial engineering at Lehigh University, while Brian, a high school senior plans to study culinary arts and restaurant management at Penn College, a Williamsport affiliate of Penn State.

Knoebel is no stranger to non-profit organizations. She once traveled 20,000 miles in one year to several states, including Hawaii, as an active ambassador for the Order of the Eastern Star. She has held several state posts for the organization and is past matron of the Iris Chapter in Shamokin.

"I like helping people and have a great time doing it," says Knoebel. She expresses a particular interest in the BU post because it offers an opportunity to assist young people.

"I enjoy talking to kids, helping them with what they see as their goals," says Knoebel. She and her family not only work with many young people at the park, but also welcome a constant stream of her own sons' many friends into their household. "We get Mother's Day cards, Father's Day cards, and some of them show us their report cards. You can tell when they have things they want to talk about."

Her enthusiasm carries through to her job as park catering manager, responsible for serving as many as 200,000 meals in a single season. Even though the hours are long — 80 to 100 a week during the busy season — "you can't wait to get there and get started," she says. "It's different all the time. You must keep an open mind because

Orchid fancier donates collection to Biology Department

Assistant Director of Development

Dr. Alvin H. Funke, a local physician, donated his entire collection of more than 725 orchids to the BU biology department. "For more than 25 years I nourished and loved these orchids," said Funke. "My hope is that those at the university will appreciate and enjoy them."

"This spectacular collection, representing a unique group of plants, shows Dr. Funke's devotion to developing this wonderful assembly of orchids," said Dr. Louis Mingrone, biology department chairperson. "We were thrilled that he chose to giv the plants to Bloomsburg. Beyond their beauty which everyone can enjoy, they are a botanist's delight."

In an interview, Mingrone explained why the university would be willing to accept such a gift. According to him, the orchid root is a highly desirable substance, in lieu of laboratory animals, for tissue culture research. The use of these roots holds new opportunities for undergraduate and graduate student research in many of the science courses offered at BU. Orchids are a renewable resource—always producing new roots. They are a clean, safe, and biodegradable product. The orchids will also be of interest to art majors and others wanting to paint or draw this type of still life.

In addition to the orchids, Funke also donated about 200 cactus plants. Representing various growth habits and offering grafting experimentation, the cacti are also welcome in the classroom.

According to Mingrone, the flower of the orchid comes in many colors—browns, pinks, you're constantly finding new ways to do things, finding out what people want and trying to help them," she adds. "We've been doing it 'your way' longer than Burger King."

Her board participation is not the first time the Knoebel family has helped BU. Knoebel Lumber contributed materials to extend the Haas Auditorium stage for the 1989 Rudolf Nureyev and Friends performance. The park has also hosted picnics and tours for Russian students visiting the campus as part of the Hugh O'Brian Youth Exchange program.

Despite a hectic schedule, Knoebel was pleased to accept when asked to join the board last December. "Things you want to do you always have time for," she says. She hopes her addition as another woman on the board will help provide balance and perspective.

"There are a lot of different ways to look at the same thing," she says. "But when you join any organization, you have to start out by listening for a while and learning from that."

"The entire area is extremely fortunate to have such a fine university right here. And the community is quite an asset to the college. They complement each other," says Knoebel. "I'm proud and pleased to serve."

Orchids

purples, and even shades of green—and varies in size from approximately two to five or six inches. Depending upon the species, the life of a blossom, when remaining on the plant, can extend from two days to a month or longer.

Besides color variations, orchids emit unique aromas that range from the most pleasing, delicate scent to the malodorus. To release their fragrance, orchids must remain on the plant until maturity. Because commercially sold orchids are removed from the plant before the maturing process is complete, they produce little, if any, odor.

As of this writing, only a few of the hundreds of plants were in bloom. Each plant, which produces one bloom, flowers approximately once a year. Mingrone is eagerly anticipating the unfolding of much beauty and many surprises.

During the months ahead, he will be cataloging, organizing, and replanting the exotic plants. Instead of the usual soil base, orchids are grown in a wood-chip medium. In the tropical rain forests, these flowers grow on trees and other plants, an environment that can be fairly well replicated in a greenhouse.

In an aside, Mingrone noted that more than 15,000 orchid species grow worldwide, except in deserts. There are 74 species native to Northeastern United States, a few of which can be found as near as Hazleton. Native orchids, however, are difficult to maintain in a greenhouse atmosphere because they require fungi and other living organisms found only in the soil.

Because there are few orchid collections of this size and extent in this region, particularly at colleges, Mingrone foresees an interest from the scientific community. Eventually, root samples will be available for scientific experiments and as cuttings for new plants.

The construction of a greenhouse suitable for the new collection was made possible through the combined effort of the university's academic affairs and general administration divisions and The Bloomsburg University Foundation, Inc. BU tradesmen assembled a greenhouse kit and installed the lighting, heating, and plumbing systems. The facility is located on the upper campus and may be visited by making arrangements with Mingrone in the biology department.

Notes of thanks

My deepest thanks to each of you whose loyalty to Bloomsburg University continues from year to year, unwavering. Your gifts enable us to continue our strong support of the Alumni Association and the many on-going projects and scholarships funded by the BU Foundation. — Harry Ausprich, President

I want to thank you for your extraordinary gifts and pledges to The Trust for Generations campaign of over $3.4 million. The tremendous commitment that such an achievement represents, and the hard work and the willingness to aim for a truly significant goal, are precisely the qualities that Bloomsburg seeks to encourage in all who work and study here. Your example is inspiring. — Jim Creasy '57, Chairperson, The Trust for Generations

Members of the Bloomsburg University Foundation and I are deeply grateful to each alumnus and friend of the university who helped raise $1.6 million last year. Your collective commitment to higher education makes us proud to be associated with this fine institution. — Jan Girton, Chairperson, BU Foundation

A year ago we set a goal of $120,000 for The Parents' Fund. In the time since then, Bloomsburg has met its goal, more than doubling the amount received from parents who have not attended Bloomsburg themselves but who fully appreciate its value. We think this is an outstanding endorsement of an outstanding university. Thank you for all you have done as members of the Bloomsburg family. — John and Camille Manfredonia, Chairpersons, The 1990-1991 Parents' Fund

1990 was a record year for alumni giving, and we were delighted to be able to play a role in this achievement. We were pleasantly surprised to receive notes from some of you. It was heart-warming to be reminded of how many alumni truly care about Bloomsburg and want to help insure its continuing success. — Jeananne (Evans) '54 and John Scrimgeour '53, Chairpersons, 1990 Annual Fund

The Husky Club Board of Advisors, the athletic coaches and administrators, and the student-athletes thank you for your generosity. Your contributions supporting the Husky Club and athletic scholarships continue to enable student-athletes to obtain a quality education while competing in collegiate athletics. — Bob Yeager, President, Husky Club Board of Advisors

Please Note:

Pledge payments for the 1991 Alumni Phonothon should be completed by June 15. This will allow the good and immediate use of your gifts.

Thank you for your support of Bloomsburg University and its students.

Golf Outings Changed

The annual Husky Club Golf Outing, usually held in June, is scheduled for August 12 at the Frosty Valley Country Club. The Husky Club Spring Sizzler Golf Day, a new event, was held on April 20, at the Mill Race Golf Course.

The latter was designed to attract new people to Husky Club events.

The August golf outing will retain its traditional shotgun start, prizes, and dinner. If sufficient interest is expressed (16 minimum), a tennis event will be staged.

To make a reservation or to get more information, contact the Husky Club at (717)389-4663.

Lackawanna Stadium site of BU-ESU games for next two years

Bloomsburg University and East Stroudsburg University have agreed to play their annual Pennsylvania Conference football game the next two years at Lackawanna County Stadium in Moosic.

This year's contest will be played at 1 p.m. on Saturday, October 19. The 1992 contest is scheduled for September 26. The Lackawanna County Stadium is the home of the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre Red Barons, a Triple A farm club of the Philadelphia Phillies.

"Both of our schools are pleased to schedule this game in an effort to serve our alumni in the area," said Dr. Harry Ansprich, BU president. "We all are excited about this new initiative."

"As representatives of the State System of Higher Education, Bloomsburg and East Stroudsburg are excited about the opportunity we have to 'share our campuses' with our friends in the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area," said Dr. James E. Gilbert, East Stroudsburg president.

As members of the PSAC, both Bloomsburg and East Stroudsburg are NCAA Division II schools. The schools have met in football for 64 years since 1927.

Pete Adrian, Bloomsburg head coach for five seasons, said: "It's great to get the opportunity to play in a super facility and in front of our friends and alumni in Scranton/Wilkes-Barre. If the last several games with East Stroudsburg are any indication of the type of game the spectators will see, it should be a great show."

"These games will bring Division II football for the first time into a great football area," said Denny Douds, who has been head coach at ESU for 17 years. "The region has a rich football heritage and has produced many outstanding players and coaches."

The last two BU-ESU games both were decided on the final play.

Last season, the Warriors scored a touchdown on a three-yard pass from quarterback Bret Comp to wide receiver Ken Kopetchny for a 23-21 victory.

Two years ago, the Huskies stopped East Stroudsburg on the one-yard line on a tackle by linebacker Brian Angney as the clock ran down to preserve a 17-14 win.

A steering committee has been formed with administrators, students and alumni representing both schools and the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area to begin planning for the games. Any BU alumnus or alumna who would like to serve on this committee should call the Alumni Office at 1-800-526-0254.

Hugh O'Brian, founder of youth leadership program to receive degree

Hugh O'Brian, whose leadership program for high school sophomores brought teenagers from the Soviet Union to Bloomsburg the past two summers, will speak at the Commencement Convocation ceremony on Saturday, May 11.

The veteran television and screen actor, who founded the Hugh O'Brian Youth Foundation (HOBY) in 1958 to "seek out, recognize, and reward" leadership potential in high school sophomores, will receive an honorary doctor of humane letters degree during the ceremony.

"Bloomsburg wishes to recognize Hugh O'Brian's humanitarian efforts and his devotion to public service," said John S. Mulka, dean of student development, who helped coordinate local arrangements for both Soviet visits to Bloomsburg.

O'Brian started HOBY upon returning to the United States following a nine-day visit with the late Albert Schweitzer in Africa. "I was impressed with Dr. Schweitzer," O'Brian said. "He believed the most important thing in education is to teach young people to think for themselves."

HOBY's format permits American high school sophomores with demonstrated leadership abilities to interact with distinguished business, education, government, and other professional leaders at leadership seminars arranged across the country.

O'Brian believes HOBY's mission is to teach future leaders how to think. "I do NOT believe we are all born equal . . . but I DO believe every man and woman, if given the opportunity and encouragement to recognize their potential, regardless of background, has the freedom to choose in our world," he says.

O'Brian, who starred in "Wyatt Earp" on television in the late 1950s and early 1960s, was born in Rochester, N.Y. At 18, he attended the University of Cincinnati for a semester before enlisting in the U.S. Marine Corps. He became the youngest drill instructor in the Corps' history and earned a coveted Fleet appointment to Annapolis, but declined the honor to study law at Yale University instead.

After receiving an honorable discharge from the Corps, O'Brian went to Los Angeles to earn money to pay for his tuition to Yale. He landed a job with a small theater group and received such good reviews in the play "Home and Beauty" that he decided to enroll at UCLA and continue acting.

In less than a year, Hollywood actress and director Ida Lupino signed O'Brian to perform his first starring role in the film, "Young Lovers." — Kevin B. Engler died December 6 at age 38. She was a teacher at the Hemphill Elementary School in West Virginia until June 1990. She had moved to Appalachia in 1979 to teach third and fourth grade in a rural, poverty-stricken area.

For the past 11 years, at Christmas, she would ask for pencils, pens, toothbrushes, notebooks and stickers to give to her students. Her mother would ask what she wanted, and Cheryl would answer that she really didn't need anything herself.

"She went down there with such great hopes and, like most teachers, she was just on fire," said her mother, Anna Kram Korpics. Cheryl tried to teach her students the importance of big things, like the education that might bring them a better life.

She started a Girl Scout troop in Hemphill. "The poorer ones would have parents who couldn't take them places," said her sister, Sharon Haines. "So she would take them out for roller skating or for pizza. Some of them had never had pizza or been roller skating before."

She would have her mother and sister collect soup labels to buy things for her school, along with used clothing for her students.

Before she died of cancer in Bethlehem, she received numerous cards from former students and a large card from the whole school.

Canyonlands

May 14-18, 1992

Ray Smith, director of BU's QUEST and Corporate Institute programs, has considerable experience in leading groups. He was a wildlife safari and mountain guide in East Africa in the 1960s and has led National Geographic supported expeditions to the Arctic and Africa. He is a writer and photographer who lectures frequently at museums and universities across the U.S. on topics relating to travel, teambuilding and adventure.

Canyonlands is a very special place between the canyons of the Colorado River and the snow-covered peaks of the Manti La Sal Mountains. It is an evocative place. The wind and water-sculptured red and gray sandstone landscape spreads out for hundreds of square miles across a virtually uninhabited land. Just being there is satisfying enough for many people. First settled by the Mormons in the late 19th century, the place has an almost Biblical quality to it, stark and mystical, reminiscent of the Holy Land.

We will plan to explore this incredible piece of geography on foot and by mountain bikes along spectacular trails, some of which overlook the Colorado River.

We will camp for the duration of our stay at a really attractive campsite (hot showers) in Moab, using tents and sleeping bags. We'll prepare and cook our own food, although there will be opportunities to take an occasional meal in a local restaurant. Mountain bikes will be rented in Moab unless you prefer to take your own.

We'll fly out of Philadelphia airport (or an airport convenient to your location) to Grand Junction, and drive rented vehicles to Moab in Utah.

Cost of the trip is $390, exclusive of air fare. Price includes leadership of the group, car rental, food (on the camping plan), bike rental for one day, tents and miscellaneous cooking equipment, and camping fees.

On each nine-day trip, the group of BU alumni and friends will spend three days in Mexico City, a vibrant and beautiful metropolis of 20 million people. Founded by the Aztecs in 1325, Tenochtitlan — as it was called then — became the largest and wealthiest city in pre-Columbian Mesoamericas. Sightseeing trips will include the pre-Aztec pyramids of the Sun and Moon at Teotohacan, the world famous Museum of Anthropology in Chapultpec Park, and the National Ballet, where the origin of Mexico is beautifully depicted in dance. No journey to Mexico City would be complete without a visit to the National Palace, only a block from our hotel, where the enormous murals of Diego Rivera grace the interior walls.

The group will then travel northwest from Mexico City to Morelia in the State of Michoacan, a region of mountains and lakes, renowned for its wide boulevards and earth-toned colonial mansions, cultural history, and museums. From Morelia we will make a short trip to the idylic, small market town of Patzcuara and to the shores of the nearby lake which bears its name.

On our return to Mexico City, we will stop at the mountain village of Angangueo at 9,000 feet. From there we will trek through the hilly, farm country (or use local transportation) to the mist shrouded fir forests where millions of migratory Monarch butterflies spend the winter. This part of the trip into the heart of rural Mexico will be a photographer's paradise.

Cost of the trip is $785, excluding air fare of approximately $390. We are keeping this trip affordable by staying in reasonably priced hotels and occasionally using inexpensive but excellent public transportation. This trip will appeal to those who have a sense of adventure and enjoy travelling off the beaten track. We'll dine in Mexican restaurants where the cuisine is good and the coffee is excellent. (If you can't go 10 days without traditional American cuisine, then this is not the trip for you.)

This trip provides a great opportunity to combine a pleasurable cultural experience with travel and natural history.

Orchestra offers 'Symphony at Sea' in June 1992

The Bloomsburg University-Community Orchestra is pleased to host its second "Symphony at Sea" trip to St. Maarten, St. John, St. Thomas and the NCL Pleasure Island aboard the S. S. Norway. The symphony will perform shipboard and in St. Thomas. Dates of the trip are June 20-27, 1992.

The orchestra has existed periodically in various states throughout the 152-year history of the university. It took its final shape in 1971 when Dr. John Master revived the group.

The orchestra has been growing and improving in quality ever since it began as a small chamber orchestra of mainly community members and some university students. The ensemble consists of 60-70 university students, college professors and community members who perform music mainly from the major symphony orchestra repertoire.

Dr. Mark R. Jelinek, assistant professor of music at BU, has been the group's conductor since 1986. For more information, contact Dr. Jelinek at 717-389-4289.

Colorado Rockies

August 15-22, 1992

Roy Smith, director of BU's QUEST program and Corporate Institute, will lead this trip.

We will spend seven days in the Gunnison National Forest and the Maroon Bells Snowmass Wilderness area in the western Colorado Rockies. This area, near Aspen and close to the headwaters of the Colorado River, is internationally renowned for its beautiful scenery and outdoor recreation. Except for the last evening of the course, we will spend the entire time "under canvass" doing our own cooking over an open fire.

Most of our activities will occur above 8,500 feet. To take advantage of all the program activities, I recommend that you get in good hiking shape.

Activities during the trip will include hiking from the small mountain town of Crested Butte, across the Continental Divide by way of a 12,000-foot pass, to Aspen. This hike will take us through some of the most magnificent mountain scenery in the Rockies.

Rock climbing and mountain biking will also be available as part of the trip. There will be opportunities for photography, bird watching, fishing (out-of-state license is $15), visits to small mountain communities, and just taking your time in a quiet and beautiful part of the world.

Cost of this trip is $575, excluding air fare. This includes ground travel in Colorado, food (prepared and cooked at our camp), mountain bike rental for one day, one night's accommodation in a lodge, guiding and instruction.

For more information, contact Roy Smith at 717-389-4466.

Field hockey alumni named to All-Decade Team

Four former standout field hockey players have been named to the National Collegiate Athletic Association All-Decade Field Hockey Team. The squad was selected in conjunction with the organization's 10th anniversary of sponsoring women's athletics.

Daneen Fero '90, Karen Hertzler '86, Deb Long '84 and Carla Shearer '87 were among 15 players honored for their efforts in NCAA Divisions II and III during the past decade. The foursome all played on various conference and national championship teams under coach Jan Hutchinson, who has headed the Huskies' program for the past 13 seasons.

Fero earned All-American honors in 1988 and helped the Huskies to an overall record of 82-9-4 from 1986 to 1989. She, like the other three honorees, performed at a link position for the Huskies and led the club to two Pennsylvania Conference Championships, an NCAA Division III title and two national runnerup showings.

Shearer was a two-time All-American selection as she was named to the team in 1985 and 1986. She holds the school records for most assists in a season and a career with 15 and 29, respectively. In addition, she holds the Huskies' record for most points in a season with 30, as she set that mark with a team-high 15 goals and 15 assists in 1986. The Huskies were 73-7-5 when she played from 1983 to 1986 and posted the school's only undefeated campaign (19-0) in 1984. Her teams won two national championships, the Division II crown in 1983 and the Division III title in 1984, as well as two Pennsylvania Conference championships. The 1986 team was second in the conference and national tournaments.

Hertzler was also a two-time All-American choice as she was named to the nation's top team in 1984 and 1985. She was named as an attack player the first year and made the team again the following season after moving to a link position. She holds a pair of university records, most career goals (50) and most career points(65). She was Bloomsburg's leading scorer in three of her four seasons and helped the club to 70-9-2. The team won two national championships and two conference championships during her career and was also the runnerup in each event on another occasion.

Long is one of only two three-time All-Americans to ever play in Bloomsburg's highly successful program. She earned the sport's top honor in 1981, 1982 and 1983. Long led the Huskies to their first national title, an AIAW Division III

Men's basketball team wins award for sportsmanship

The men's basketball team has been named the winner of the 1991 Sam Schoenfeld Sportsmanship Award by the Harrisburg/Pittsburgh chapter of the College Basketball Officials Association. The award, presented annually since 1965, is the first for the Huskies and was accepted by head coach Charlie Chronister at a banquet on April 5 in Harrisburg.

The Harrisburg/Pittsburgh chapter is a subdivision of the CBOA which assigns the game officials for the Huskies' games as well as several hundred other northeastern colleges and universities throughout the season. The announcement of the award was made by Wally Vogelsong, CBOA area representative and veteran official who recently completed his 14th year at the collegiate level.

"This is a tribute to the entire program at Bloomsburg but especially the players and Charlie," said Vogelsong. "Each official in the section votes for the team he feels demonstrated the best sportsmanship, and the team receiving the most votes receives the award. With that many individuals voting at the end of a long season, it makes the honor special because so many have been impressed by a specific team and its demeanor on the court."

The Huskies completed the campaign with a record of 19-9 to register the school's 25th consecutive winning season. The winning streak marks the nation's second-longest at the NCAA Division II level. Bloomsburg made its 12th post-season tournament appearance in Chronister's 20 years in charge of the program, losing 69-67 to eventual Pennsylvania Conference champion Shippensburg in the conference semifinals. Chronister is the conference's all-time winningest coach with an overall record of 365-180.

"Officiating is fun and a lot easier at a place that does such a good job with the entire package," said Vogelsong. In addition to the coaches and players, the games management crew at the site, from the time they meet us at the door to when we walk out at the end of the game, should be complimented."

crown in 1981. The Huskies won another national championship in her senior season, 1983, as well as a Pennsylvania Conference title that year. Bloomsburg had an overall record of 59-16-7 during her four seasons. Long established several records during her four years which have since been broken, including goals in a season and career goals. She was credited with 16 goals and 14 assists.

SHARE-A-DAY

with a Bloomsburg student

The Alumni Association and the Husky Ambassadors are initiating a new career program in which we will match students who are interested in certain careers with alumni who are already successful in those careers. By spending a day (or part of a day) with alumni on the job, students can gain first-hand information and can benefit from the experience of the alumni.

By establishing a data base on the computer, we will be able to match students and alumni according to career area and geographic location. Since many students will be interested in taking advantage of this program in their home areas during the summer or other vacation periods, we urge alumni from all geographic areas to participate in this important program.

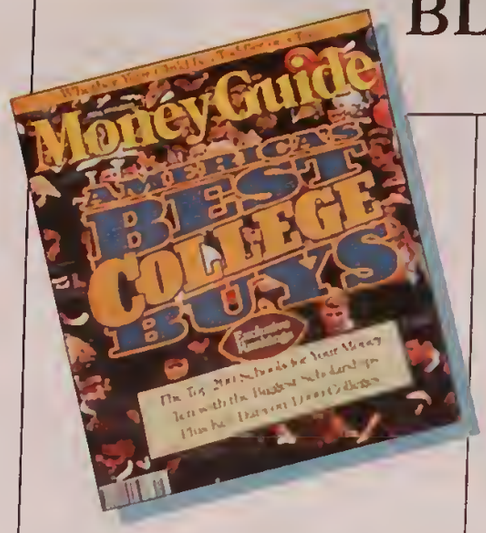
BLOOMSBURG UNIVERSITY

One of America's best college buys!



Bloomsburg University is one of the best values in education in the nation, according to a 1990 Money magazine survey that ranked BU 30th out of more than 400 public colleges and universities nationwide.

Among the 17 measures of academic criteria Money used in the survey were class rank and SAT scores of incoming freshmen, graduation rate, student-faculty ratio, and library holdings.

Quality, relative to price, is a major factor when selecting a college. However, finding a first-rate university where academics have the highest priority isn't so easy.

At Bloomsburg University, many students have established a firm career goal. Others need to explore different options. Our faculty and staff are committed to helping students reach their full potential. With a student-faculty ratio of 19:1, Bloomsburg University provides close academic supervision. Sixty-seven undergraduate degrees, as well as 16 master's degree programs are offered. Total enrollment at Bloomsburg is 7,464.

Bricks and mortar

Bloomsburg University has begun a $16 million facelift which includes major renovations to three buildings and the installation of elevators, ramps and other handicapped-access facilities.

Construction started early this summer on the renovation of Kehr Union, Hartline Science Center and Scranton Commons.

Smaller projects which include installing elevators in four buildings, replacing the roofs of four buildings and constructing curbs, ramps and power doors for the physically impaired have also begun.

In addition, Bloomsburg is in the process of designing a $6.6 million student recreation center and will begin a steam and energy conservation project this fall.

Forming partnerships for the common good

By HARRY AUSPRICH, Ph.D.
President of the University

Recently, both Bloomsburg University and the State System of Higher Education reaffirmed their commitment to public service, identifying it as one of the main strategic directions for the 1990s. In fact, the university's commitment to regional development through public service has been evident throughout its 152-year history. Considering Bloomsburg's fundamental mission has been and continues to be education, why has public service been sustained as part of our on-going activities?

Auspich

In the 1830s, the French social philosopher Alexis de Tocqueville offered this penetrating analysis of the importance of public service. "Amongst the laws which rule human societies, there is one which seems to be more precise and clear than all others. If men are to remain civilized, or to become so, the art of associating together (pursuing in common the object of their common desires) must grow and improve in the same ratio in which equality of conditions is increased." Improving the common lot for our society depends upon our "associating together," forming partnerships, for the purpose of acting on behalf of the common good. That is why Bloomsburg University has made an on-going commitment to public service.

Our commitment is carried out in diverse ways by many parts of the university. Three distinct categories of public service and community outreach are university, organizational, and individual service.

University service encompasses those activities which are supported directly by the university, such as community use of library; the Reading Clinic, the Speech, Hearing and Language Clinic; the Harrisburg/Bloomsburg Urban Initiatives Program, and the Ben Franklin Partnership.

Organizational service includes activities sponsored by campus groups such as support for social service agencies, fund-raising activities for non-profit groups, and bloodmobiles.

Individual community service encompasses all the volunteer activities of students, faculty, staff, and alumni which are extended to the university's region and beyond.

We've taken an active role in encouraging our students to become involved in public service through both the curricular and co-curricular programs. Students who take advantage of volunteer opportunities tell us that the activities are a highly valued part of their collegiate education. It is our hope that through these experiences, students will be better prepared to assume their emerging role as citizens who can make a positive impact in their communities. I'm proud to say that many Bloomsburg University alumni are committed to giving their time and talent in public service and that they are truly making a difference.

Making services provided through university volunteers more accessible to the public is the goal of the School of Extended Programs in its role as a center for regional development. This center will facilitate more effective communication of the university's service mission to its constituencies and improve the ability of those groups to access the services of faculty, the volunteer services office, and all university staff whose responsibilities and interests include public service activities.

As we approach the new millennium, Bloomsburg University will continue to strive to raise the equality of conditions for our citizenry by providing educational opportunities and by continuing our commitment to public service. We have chosen to do so because we know that higher education cannot be insulated and detached from economic growth, societal change, environmental issues, and national and global strategies. We will do everything possible to fulfill our mission, and, to paraphrase Lewis Thomas, we will be looking for ways to be more useful, listening more carefully for signals, and having an eye out for partners.

Focus on chapter development

By MARY ANNE KLEMKOSKY '59
President of the Alumni Association

To match the recordbreaking temperatures this summer, the heat has been on the Alumni Association! We continue to target reaching out to the multitude of our alumni — nearly 35,000 strong! The June to September calendar for the Alumni Office included 28 evening or weekend chapter events or planning sessions.

The Association is implementing a pilot program this year targeting six geographic areas in which to identify alumni who are interested in coming together to undertake projects to benefit the university and to enjoy social activities.

Klemkosky

Alumni in the Harrisburg, Lehigh Valley, Montgomery County, New Jersey, Snyder-Union-Northumberland, and Wyoming Valley areas have received surveys to determine their interests. In each case a core group of interested alumni has been identified and has met at least once.

Enthusiastic alumni planned a busy schedule of events for summer and fall, including freshmen picnics and Berrigan sub parties. The Harrisburg area chapter, for example, had a very successful Berrigan sub picnic on June 19 which attracted 130 alumni and friends, as well as a successful freshmen picnic on August 6. Other successful Berrigan picnics were held in the Wyoming Valley, the Lehigh Valley and Bucks County/South Jersey.

As the network of alumni in each of these areas strengthens and grows, we plan to target new geographic areas. We want to reach out and have interesting activities available for alumni in as many areas as possible.

Whether you are a new or a "seasoned" alum, you can be part of the growing number of alumni who wish to be active members of the Bloomsburg University family. To learn more about alumni who are in your geographic area or to initiate a planning session for an alumni event, call the Alumni House at 800-526-0254 or FAX your ideas to us at 717-389-4060.

Be sure to join us for Homecoming on October 25-27!

Study shows impact of university

What's a college worth to a community?

Plenty, according to a new study by a respected research group.

Each dollar invested in higher education in Pennsylvania returns $1.71 to the state's economy, according to the report by the non-partisan Pennsylvania Economy League.

The PEL study also found that despite the high return on investment, state funding for higher education is steadily declining.

Locally, consider the impact Bloomsburg University has on the region's economy. And with the state's budget in a mess, consider the long-term prospects if government investment in BU continues to decline.

The PEL study included the 18 state-owned and state-related universities, 84 independent universities, and 13 community colleges. The results were then compared to a similar study PEL did 10 years ago.

"We looked at a dollar-for-dollar comparison of what is spent to what is invested in our colleges and universities," said the PEL's Robert E. Greenwood.

Higher education was found to be a remarkable growth industry during the 1980s.

In academic year 1989-1990, the schools were responsible for some $9.25 billion in expenditures in Pennsylvania's economy, on revenues of $5.41 billion. Hence, the $1.71 return on the dollar.

Moreover, it was found that the number of people employed in higher education increased 19 percent from 102,500 in 1980 to 122,000 in 1990. In fact, higher education ranks as the state's ninth largest employer.

Also, universities generated a net gain of $1.23 billion in out-of-state money for the state's economy in 1989-1990. Greenwood said that's more than double the $500 million the universities brought in 10 years ago.

But the study also found that state government for almost a decade has been investing less and less as a percentage of operating revenues in its colleges and universities. In 1980 government support, including state appropriations for operating costs and financial aid for students, accounted for 19.1 percent of total revenues in higher education. By 1989-1990 the figure had dropped to 13.3 percent.

"The economic impact of higher education is particularly impressive when one considers that a decrease in government support has forced colleges and universities to seek funds elsewhere," Greenwood said.

And government support will probably continue to drop.

This fiscal year, Governor Casey plans to give the universities about the same as last. Faced with a massive deficit, the legislature has little choice but to go along.

In coming years, the outlook is no brighter. So the PEL study will be worth keeping in mind as the state universities compete for their cut of a fixed pie.

It's easy to take BU for granted. Bloomsburg Town Council said as much in a recent resolution, noting that "we tend to overlook and ignore some of the very fine contributions made by our institutions and their impact on our local citizens."

The resolution went on to commend the university on 13 specific points, including its planning, its scholarly work, and its encouragement of cultural diversity and community involvement by students and staff.

Like any big institution in a small town, BU creates its share of problems, most of which have been well documented. That's inevitable, especially when the job of the institution happens to be turning teenagers into educated young adults.

But as the PEL report and the council resolution remind us, it is a powerful force for good both economically and socially.

As the school's good neighbors, we may need to remind our lawmakers of that in coming years.

Four honored for accomplishments, service

Three alumni and a faculty member were honored at the annual awards dinner-dance of the Alumni Association on Alumni Day, April 27.

Recipients of Distinguished Service Awards were Sara Marie Dockey Edwards '44, Francis R. Johnson '50, and Rod C. Kelchner '56.

The Distinguished Service Awards were established by the Alumni Association in 1948 to recognize alumni who have excelled in at least one area: Significant accomplishments in his or her profession, outstanding service to the University and/or the Alumni Association, or contributions to humanity. The Alumni Association has now honored 97 alumni and administrators in this way.

Recognized as an honorary alumna at the same ceremony was Jan Hutchinson, successful coach of the Huskies softball and field hockey programs.

First instituted in 1985, this designation recognizes special individuals who have played significant roles in the life of the University. By their generous and caring spirit, they have set an example for all alumni to follow.

Sara Marie Dockey Edwards '44

"Sallie," as she is known by her friends, was honored for her exceptional and distinguished service to the communities of Bloomsburg and Berwick.

As owner of The Studio Shop in Bloomsburg from 1962 to 1981, she was appointed to the Chamber of Commerce Board in 1970 and served until 1984. As chair of the Chamber's Beautification Committee, she directed the solicitation and planting of 87 trees on Main and East streets in celebration of our country's 200th birthday. In 1977 she organized the first Renaissance Day to celebrate the unveiling of the bronze tree plaque on the front of the Court House. It is appropriate that "Renaissance" as become a tradition in Bloomsburg and usually coincides with Alumni Weekend.

Edwards

In the mid-1970s, Sallie served as president of the Merchants Association. She invited faculty and student representatives from the university to each meeting of the group. That grew into the creation of the Town-Gown Committee which still meets to discuss mutual concerns and to exchange ideas. She also served on the Restoration Committee for the Town of Bloomsburg.

In 1984 she was elected president of Berwick's Bicentennial Committee and led the two-year planning process for the celebration in 1986. During that year at least one major activity was held each month, with a week of intensive celebration in June. More than 700 people were involved in chairing the many activities, attesting to Sallie's abilities to lead and delegate responsibilities.

During the 1980s, Sallie also served on the Bloomsburg University Alumni Association for six years. From 1987 to 1989 she also served on the University's Sesquicentennial Committee.

Since 1988 Sallie has been serving on the Wilkes-Barre Board of Directors for the Franklin First Federal National Bank. This year she was elected to serve on the governing board of Good Shepherd Lutheran Church, Berwick, a position she was also elected to in 1964.

She also serves on the board of the Greater Berwick Corporation which is concerned with restoration in that community. She is chair of the board's Design Committee.

A graduate of Berwick High School (1940) and Bloomsburg State Teachers College (1944), Sallie taught for three years at Manchester Area High School in York County. In 1945 she married Frederick J. Edwards, and in 1948 their only child, Claudia Ann Edwards, was born.

In 1954 she returned to the family business, Berwick Shirt Company, in which she was a partner, along with her mother, two brothers and a sister. She managed the Sample Department, which was moved from the New York offices to Berwick. In 1956 she studied at the Personnel Research Center in Philadelphia in preparation for developing a personnel department in the company's three factories in Berwick, Benton and Garland, N.C.

When the family business was incorporated in 1962, Sallie and Fred left to purchase and operate The Studio Shop, a gift-decorator shop with a full line of gifts from around the world, as well as decorator home accessories and custom framing.

In 1965 she studied interior design at the New York School of Interior Design in New York City. The following year she joined the Professional Picture Framers of America, a professional study organization which conducted a school each year in major cities throughout the country.

When The Studio Shop was sold in 1981, she retained the interior decorating portion of the business and renamed it "Interiors by Sallie," which she continues to operate.

Francis R. Johnson '50, Ph.D.

Like many other Bloomsburg graduates, Dr. Johnson has devoted his professional life to education in northwestern Pennsylvania. Using the start he received as an undergraduate, he established the initial speech therapy programs in the Warren Borough Schools (1951-1956) and in the Warren County Schools (1956-1958).

Then, as assistant professor of English, psychology and special education at Edinboro State College, he established the initial program in speech pathology at that school in 1959. Later he helped establish Edinboro's Warren Campus and served as administrative director of that facility from 1964 to 1979. From 1979 until his retirement in 1987, he was a professor of speech communications. During the 1983-1984 academic year he served as acting dean of continuing education.

Johnson

In addition to classroom teaching and higher education administration, he had a private practice in speech pathology at the Warren Medical Center (1951-1958) and was a communications consultant to schools, civic organizations and business groups for over 20 years. Between 1958 and 1980 he gave approximately 300 speeches in that capacity. He has also written numerous professional articles.

Over the years Dr. Johnson has continued his own education at Pennsylvania State University (1950-1952), where he earned a master's degree in speech pathology and audiology; Case Western Reserve University (1960-1964), with one year of study as recipient of a Danforth Grant and one year under a National Institute of Health grant, State University of New York (1965-1970), and the University of Pittsburgh (1972-1976), where he earned a Ph.D. degree in Higher Education Administration.

Perhaps his most significant contribution to education is reflected by a statement on his resume: "I developed new interests on the part of students in doing more independent studies in speech communication to explore the increasing questions still unresolved in our field."

Attesting to his stature as an educator, the Dr. Frank R. Johnson Awards were established in 1980 by the Department of Special Education at Edinboro to be given to the junior speech/hearing student with the highest grade point average. In 1986 an alumni scholarship in speech and hearing was created in his name by one of his former students, Dr. Jon Shallop.

Upon his retirement in 1987, he was given a Distinguished Service Award by the Edinboro University Alumni Association in recognition of his contributions to the university and the community. He was also recipient of a Citation of Congratulations from the Pennsylvania Senate for over 30 years of distinguished service in education.

Among his other credits is a ten-year career as a radio broadcaster. In fact, he was the first announcer on the air when radio station WCNR debuted in Bloomsburg in 1947. He has also enjoyed acting and directing plays in college and as a member of the Warren Community Players.

Now that he is a professor emeritus he is serving as coordinator of continuing education for Barco-Duraz Foundation and PENNARAMA. He is also a member of the PENNARAMA advisory group. He continues to be active in his church and in Kiwanis.

He and his wife, Jean, are the parents of five children.

Rod C. Kelchner '56

The lives of Mansfield University and this award recipient have been interwovened for 27 years. Beginning as a history instructor in 1964, he has risen through the ranks to become president of our sister university in the State System of Higher Education. Coincidentally, it was a former Bloomsburg president — Chancellor James H. McCormick — who appointed Kelchner to the top post in 1983.

Over the years, he has served Mansfield in many capacities in addition to teaching. He was assistant dean of men and acting dean of men (1964-1966), assistant dean of students and director of financial aid (1966-1969), dean of students (1969-1979), and dean of development and external relations (1979-1983).

Kelchner

In the latter role, he administered various college functions: public relations, grants and contracts, alumni affairs, college development, the Mansfield Foundation, athletics and recreation, College Community Services, Inc., continuing education, legislative relations, business and industrial relations.

Kelchner earned a master's degree at Bucknell University and completed additional graduate study at Alfred University and Mansfield University. He was recipient of a Coe Foundation Fellowship in American Studies and an Asian Society Fellowship in Asian Studies, both at Bucknell University. In addition, he completed a management training course offered by the American Management Association.

In addition to serving on many professional boards and commissions, Kelchner has been extremely active as a community leader:

President, Board of Directors, The Jones Foundation; president, Tioga County Economic Development Committee;

Past president, Board of Directors, North Penn Comprehensive Health Corporation; past president, Board of Directors, Intermediate Unit 17; past president, Southern Tioga School District Board of Education;

Past president, Finance Committee, Blossburg United Methodist Church; past president, Mansfield Kiwanis Club; past chairperson, Tioga County Cancer Crusade;

Member, Board of Directors, The Mansfield Educational Foundation; member, Betterment Organization of Mansfield, Inc.; member, Tioga County Economic Development Council; member, The Year 2000 Planning Committee of Mansfield Borough, member, Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America; member, Board of Directors, United Methodist Continuing Care Services.

Mr. and Mrs. Kelchner are the parents of four children.

Jan Hutchinson

Jan Hutchinson is in her 14th season in charge of the Huskies softball and field hockey programs. She has established programs that are recognized nationally among NCAA Division II schools.

This past season, she was named "Coach of the Year" in NCAA Division II by the National Softball Coaches Association. She led her 1991 squad to a record of 43-7 and a national runner-up showing.

For a coach who has won more than 400 games in the sport, the award is a first, although she has won several regional "Coach of the Year" honors. Hutchinson capped her 14th season by leading the Huskies to the national championship rounds for the third time. Her teams have appeared in the national tournament in each of the last 11 years and had other championship round appearances in

Under Hutchinson, Bloomsburg has enjoyed several outstanding seasons and have won 20 or more games on 11 occasions. Nine of those seasons produced 30 more more victories, and the 1982 squad won the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) national crown. Under her direction, 15 athletes have won 26 All-American awards in addition to many who have gained all-regional and all-conference recognition.

Hutchinson

Her overall record at the school stands at 421-98, making her the university's all-time winningest coach. Her winning percentage of .811 also leads all current Huskies' coaches.

In addition, Hutchinson also serves as head coach of the university's highly successful field hockey program. In her 13 years as head coach of field hockey, her teams have won five conference and four national championships, including a second place finish in the national tournament last season, finishing the season with a 23-1 record. Her field hockey teams have compiled an outstanding record of 217-35-16, giving her an 80.9 winning percentage. She has coached 14 individuals to 23 All-American honors.

In 1981-1982, Hutchinson became one of the few coaches to ever lead two teams to national titles in the same academic year as both the softball and field hockey squads captured AIAW Division III crowns.

The Huskies' coach, a native of Newton, N.J., received her Bachelor of Science degree in 1971 and earned her Master of Education degree in physical education in 1979, both from East Stroudsburg. She has been inducted into the ESU Athletic Hall of Fame in recognition of her accomplishments.

From 1971 to 1978 she was a member of the faculty at Blair Academy in Blairstown, N.J., where she initiated the women's physical education and inter-scholastic sports programs. She served as head coach of field hockey, basketball and softball.

Five alumni recognized for athletic prowess

Five new members joined the BU Athletic Hall of Fame during an induction banquet on Friday, September 13. They became the 31st through 35th members of the elite group.

The new inductees include the late Lamar Blass '37, who lettered four years in basketball and track and field, establishing several school records in the latter sport; Donna (Santa Maria) Koons '79, who was one of the last women athletes to play three sports — field hockey, basketball and softball; John Maturani '53, who was an All-American linebacker lettering four years in football; Rodney Morgans '50, who was also a four-year letter winner in football; and Jerry Radocha '77, who lettered for four years in basketball and holds 10 university records including the Huskies' all-time scoring total.

Donna (Santa Maria) Koons '79

Koons was one of the university's last three-sport female performers holding starting positions on the field hockey, basketball and softball teams. She was a four-year starter for the field hockey squad under coaches Mary Gardner and Jan Hutchinson.

Koons

The midfielder served as a Huskies' captain and gained several post-season honors including all-conference and all-sectional selections. In addition, she served as an assistant coach for the 1981 unit that captured the school's first national crown in a women's sport.

The standout was also one of the initiators of Bloomsburg's softball program, which, along with field hockey, are still two of the Huskies' most successful programs. She was a two-year starter in center field after the team spent one season playing on a club basis. She was also a member of the Huskies' basketball team for four seasons.

She is married to Tom Koons '79, a former football player for the Huskies, and they are the parents of three children.

John Maturani '53

Known as one of the university's most outstanding linebackers, Maturani performed for the football teams under legendary coach Robert Redman. A four-year starter, Maturani played with and against a majority of players who had returned from time in the service and were as many as 13 years older than he.

Maturani

He received several offers from large schools but chose Bloomsburg, following his high school coach, "Lefty" Danks, who had accepted the head coaching position. Danks died before assuming the duties, and Redman took over and coached Maturani, who earned a starting berth which he held for four seasons.

While earning a spot on Tom Harmon's Little All-American team and the offer of a tryout with the Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League for his defensive abilities, Maturani played both ways for the Huskies. He was a center in the single-wing offense, a vital part of the club's running and passing attack. His professional tryout was eliminated, and his graduation from Bloomsburg was delayed, due to time in the service. In 1955, he joined the staff of the Danville School District, where he spent 34 years as an educator, including 23 years as athletic director.

Rodney Morgans '50

Morgans was also a member of the football team from 1947 to 1950, during which time the Huskies posted a 30-4 record, including an undefeated campaign in 1948. Morgans was a tackle for the Huskies following a stint with the Armed Forces in World War II. After graduation, he returned to his alma mater, South Williamsport High School, as a teacher and assistant football coach.

Morgans

He assumed the reins as head coach in 1955 and spent 14 years in the position, leading his teams to a record of 92-40-2, including the West Branch Conference title and the school's only undefeated season (10-1) in 1961. He retired from coaching in 1968 when he moved into the school administration, serving as athletic director for several years before being named high school principal.

He was honored last fall for his efforts of nearly 40 years in the South Williamsport School District when the school's West Central Avenue Stadium was renamed the Rodney K. Morgans Stadium.

Jerry Radocha '77

Radocha is recognized as one of the finest players in the Huskies' outstanding basketball program which has posted 25 consecutive winning seasons. He holds 11 university records, including most point in a career with 1,778. He capped his time as a four-year starter in 1977 by earning All-American honors. In addition, he is one of only four players to have his jersey retired by the school.

Radocha

He earned multiple in-season honors and helped the team to some fine records including a 22-6 mark in 1973-1974 when the Huskies won an NCAA Mid-Atlantic Regional title and reached the national quarterfinals. He was named to the All-Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference and the All-Eastern College Athletic Conference teams on three occasions and was the winner of the university's outstanding underclass and senior male athlete of the year awards.

His offensive versatility was evidenced by some of his records which included most field goals in a game (20), most free throws made in a season (132) and highest scoring average in a season (24.9 points per game). In addition, he held the university's career assist record (336) which has since been broken.

Lamar Blass '37

Blass was a member of some of the Huskies' outstanding track and field teams in the 1930s and helped lead the team to its first Pennsylvania State Teachers Conference title in 1937.

Blass

He won four letters in basketball as well as with the track and field unit, and he also played one year of football at Bloomsburg. He was captain of the track and field team in his final two seasons during which he established several university records.

Several outstanding performances dotted his career, and he held records in the 100- and 120-yard high hurdles, high jump, long jump and sot put. He held the career record for team points as he contributed 306 points during his career. His individual high point total was 30 points in a 1937 dual meet against Susquehanna in which he registered six first-place finishes.

Blass, who has a scholarship named in his honor at BU, went on to teach and coach in the Catawissa and New Holland school districts before being drafted in 1942. He served with the 68th Armored Field Artillery Battalion until he was killed in action on May 29, 1944.

His widow, Marian Kostenbauder, accepted the award on his behalf.

Hall of Fame members create new scholarship

Members of the Bloomsburg University Athletic Hall of Fame are creating a new scholarship that will be made available to an eligible student-athlete on a yearly basis.

Of the 30 Hall of Fame members, 26 are living and active alumni. These people have "teamed up" to support the athletic program with the same kind of energy and spirit that brought them and their Husky teammates such reat success when they were at Bloomsburg. Each year, new Hall of Fame inductees will be joining this effort to advance the BU athletic program to higher levels.

David Linkchorst '52, the honoraty chair for this special fundraising campaign, was a star athlete in football and basketball during his college years. After graduation, he guided the Mahanoy Area School District basketball team as its coach for many years. Now an avid golfer, he plays nearly year round.

Linkchorst's support of BU and its athletic program is long standing, and his attendance at Huskies football and basketball games is nearly perfect. Because of his great enthusiasm for and support of both college and high school athletics, he was a logical choice to serve as campaign chair.

The Hall of Fame Scholarship will be awarded annually, at the discretion of the Director of Athletics, to a deserving student-athlete in a sport where the special talent is needed to help assure a winning team. For information about this or other Husky Club fundraising activities, contact the Husky Club at (717)389-4663.

Lackawanna Stadium site of BU-ESU game on October 19

Plans for the first of two Bloomsburg University-East Stroudsburg University football games to be played in the Lackawanna County Stadium have been finalized.

The kickoff time for the October 19 contest is 3:30 p.m. The Scranton-Wilkes-Barre market's CBS affiliate, WYOU TV-22, requested the time change in order to broadcast the game live.

This exciting development was precipitated by WYOU General Manager Harry McClintoch's inquiry to the steering committee about the possibility of television coverage. The committee, with approval from BU President Harry Ausprich and his ESU counterpart, Dr. James Gilbert, agreed to the time change and broadcast package. The added exposure from the televising of the game is of tremendous value to the two universities.

The telecast will be seen in 22 counties in northeastern and north central Pennsylvania. Exposure to the public was the major reason for the two state universities agreeing to these two contests in Lackawanna Stadium. The amount of the exposure would have been significant just from the special venue, but the new level could not have been attained without the involvement of WYOU.

The last two games between BU and ESU have been barnburners with each team snatching a victory. Two years ago, the Huskies stopped East Stroudsburg on the one-yard line as the clock ran down on a Brian Angney tackle to preserve a 17-14 win at ESU. Last season, the Warriors scored a touchdown on

New scholarships

Beard & Company

Robert J. Gibble, '68, president of Beard & Company, Inc., recently helped s establish a new scholarship fund for accounting majors in the college of business.

The Reading, PA firm of certified public accountants employs a number of Bloomsburg University graduates, most of whom elected to participate in the Beard & Company scholarship. Gifts and pledges of $6,870.00 will establish the base for the awards.

"We continue to appreciate Bloomsburg's commitment to a quality education. We have benefited greatly, both as a firm and as individuals," said Gibble. "We welcome the opportunity to support the college of business, and to 'give something back' to an institution that has so greatly contributed to our success."

The pledges will be paid over a three-year period, and the scholarship itself will become part of The Trust for Generations scholarship fund. Beard & Company will be working closely with Carol Matteson, dean of the College of B usiness, to determine the selection criteria.

"The relationship we have with both Gibble and Beard & Company is an excellent example of how higher education and business can support each other," said Matteson. "Here are alumni who appreciate the importance of higher education in their lives and a company which values the quality of our graduates. Together, they are willing to help future graduates achieve their educational goals."

Nationwide Insurance

A Nationwide/Bloomsburg University Alumni Scholarship was recently established. According to Roy Croop '53, Nationwide's vice president for property, casualty, and sales, the scholarship will support awards for marketing and management majors.

Thirty-one BU alumni who work for Nationwide have contributed $3,000 that will be matched by Nationwide to make a $6,000 gift this year.

"This type of on-going support for Bloomsburg students from the private sector helps to set an example for others who also understand the importance of higher education and the need to help educate our students," said Carol Matteson, dean of the College of Business.

It is hoped that the first award can be made in 1992.

Eli McLaughlin

A scholarship fund named in honor of long-time BU men's swimming and diving coach Eli McLaughlin has made tremendous strides in only eight months, thanks to the contributions of more than 35 individuals.

The scholarship was initiated by a group of McLaughlin's former swimmers and is presented to a member of the team on an annual basis.

McLaughlin

Head Coach Dave Rider is responsible for selecting the recipient of the $500 scholarship. The fund has a balance of $10,793.50.

McLaughlin directed the swimming and diving program for 23 seasons, compiling a record of 151-140-2 before retiring from coaching in 1985. He resumed full-time teaching duties until his retirement from the university faculty in 1986.

Throughout the years from 1966 to 1980, McLaughlin had 31 swimmers and a diver who qualified in 130 events at NCAA championships, with nine swimmers gaining All-America status in 22 events.

He also achieved the "Master Coach" award in 1982, presented by the College Swimming Coaches Association of America.

His teams finished among the top three squads in the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference championships on 14 occasions, and he coached 15 conference champions in 27 events. He was voted PSAC "Coach of the Year" by his peers in 1979 and served as host for five conference championship meets.

As historian for the PSAC Men's Swimming and Diving Coaches Association, he compiled the PSAC Profiles, a manual of the sport in the conference from 1959 to 1983. The publication was the result of many hours of research to preserve the records established in the PSAC championship competition.

In addition to his coaching responsibilities in swimming and diving, McLaughlin was an assistant coach from 1961 to 1963, assistant baseball coach in 1964 and 1965, head baseball coach in 1967, and director of aquatics until the fall term of 1983.

Involvement essential

College of Business welcomes alumni expertise

From the junior accountant with two years of experience to the CEO with 20 years of business acumen, there is a way for everyone to give and to gain from becoming involved with the College of Business activities and programs.

Dean Carol Matteson says College of Business alumni have an important role to play in the education of future College of Business graduates. Although monetary and equipment gifts are always welcome and needed, there are many other ways in which these alumni are especially prepared to participate in the College's educational program.

College of Business alumni working in business are among the first to see new trends and changes that can effect the educational curriculum. Alumni who have established contacts with faculty are able to offer important insights and suggestions for change.

These kinds of opportunities offer personal satisfaction and growth for alumni as well. It is this kind of commitment that serves as an example for others who may want to help but are uncertain about taking the first step.

Of the various kinds of opportunities briefly described below, perhaps the most valuable for everyone is the Professional Development Forum, because it touches students, faculty, alumni, and other practicing professionals in business and related fields within the campus and local communities at large.

The second Professional Development Forum is planned for April 10, 1992. A call for papers and more information appears elsewhere in this issue of Bloomsburg. Alumni are invited to submit papers for presentation, serve as panel members to discuss a current business topic, or attend as observers. Students, faculty, and selected guests will present and discuss their research, current and future problems, and trends.

Matteson

Alumni are welcomed as recruiters for identifying potential internship opportunities within their organization for undergraduate students, for recommending new graduates for vacant positions, and for identifying high school seniors who would benefit from a business degree earned at Bloomsburg University.

Alumni or other business executives, who have made a significant contribution to their organization, sometimes ask, or many volunteer themselves, to participate in the executive-in-residence program. For example, one executive-in-residence who began his career with an accounting firm was later employed by a manufacturing company. This work led to a position as general manager for a corporation.

Alumni are frequently invited back to campus as speakers for various student clubs and organizations such as the accounting, finance, or marketing clubs or Phi Beta Lambda.

Membership on the College of Business Advisory Board include both alumni and non-alumni who represent wide geographic areas, various types of businesses, and positions at all

Career Development Center seeks funds to furnish its new facility in Kehr Union

The Career Development Center was recently approved by the university's administration to raise funds to furnish its new facility in the Kehr Union Building. In September 1992, the center plans to move into the newly renovated facility.

The new center will offer a comfortable, professional atmosphere for students and recruiters. Alumni who recall the small rooms in Ben Franklin will appreciate the new image and the difference it will make in the interviewing process for today's seniors.

Gifts to the center will be used to expand the career library resources and to furnish the interview rooms, the recruiter's welcome center, and the general office area.

Contributions to help furnish the new center may be sent to the BU Foundation — Career Development Center, Carver Hall, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

80 students awarded Golden Rule Scholarships

The university has awarded 80 high school seniors, transfer students or current BU students Fred G. Smith Golden Rule Trust Fund scholarships for the 1991-1992 academic year. These students reside in Mount Carmel Township or live in the boroughs of Ashland, Mount Carmel or Shenandoah.

Seventeen recipients are recent graduates of Cardinal Brennan, Mount Carmel, North Schuylkill, Our Lady of Lourdes Regional, or Shenandoah Valley high schools who plan to study at BU.

The university also awarded transfer or renewal scholarships to 63 other graduates of the five high schools.

According to Thomas Lyons, director of financial aid, the university awards the Smith scholarships each year to new and returning students who are residents of the designated localities. Eligibility is based on financial need, and applicants must have graduated from one of the five schools.

Smith scholarships were established six years ago through the trust fund of the late Mr. Smith, a Shenandoah businessman. The trust fund is the largest scholarship program in the history of the university, says Lyons.

Gross Auditorium renovations in phase one planning stage

Preparations are underway to plan for the renovations to the Kenneth S. Gross Auditorium in Carver Hall. A consulting firm has submitted a feasibility study for Phase I. This phase includes stage structural improvements to support new rigging equipment, a communications system, stage and house electrical needs, a sound system, and a fire curtain.

Funding for Phase I was provided by Kenneth S. Gross, for whom the auditorium was recently named.

An air conditioning system and an elevator will also be installed. Scheduling of the audtorium during the summer months and access for the handicapped will allow the facility to be more fully utilized. Funds for the air conditioning have been set aside from the university's operating budget. A special grant was received to install the Carver elevator and elevators in several other campus buildings.

New seating for the facility is included in Phase II. Drapes, stage floor refinishing and lighting within the auditorium are also part of Phase II. Funding this phase is currently being sought.

It is anticipated that Phase I will be completed by the fall of 1992, when the dedication of the Kenneth S. Gross Auditorium is planned.

Carver Hall is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. In keeping with this recognition, the historical integrity of the auditorium will be preserved in the aestbetic improvements.

Book-of-the-Month Club donates books to Andruss Library

According to Marshall Mehring, the Book-of-the-Month Club will be contributing books for Andruss Library as part of the Academic Excellence Fund of The Trust for Generations campaign. Quote from Mehring:

"Congress declared 1991 as the year of the lifetime reader," said Mehring. "We hope our donation will stimulate an interest in reading and emphasize the importance of developing lifetime reading patterns."

The first of five annual shipments of books recently arrived. Nearly 100 titles will soon be shelved for readers. Some volumes are autobiographies and biographies while others are classics and favorite novels. Other offerings include arts and crafts, how-to, health, cooking, and children's books.

"A well-rounded library is central to any academic institution. The Book-of-the-Month Club gift will greatly enhance the popular reading collection," said J. Daniel Vann, director of Andruss Library. "We are delighted to add these volumes for our readers."

"Fiscal constraints have long precluded the university's ability to purchase many general-interest volumes," said Anthony M. Ianiero, assistant vice president for development. "Students and others who use the library need access to books for recreational reading as well as the necessary academic offerings. The Book-of-the-Month Club gift helps to address this inadequacy."

A complete listing of the titles is available from the dean's office in Andruss Library.

A. J. McDonnell

The Department of Curriculum and Foundations has established the A.J. McDonnell Memorial Scholarship. This award will be presented to an undergraduate, secondary education major who displays an outstanding scholarly aptitude and financial need. The Department also annually presents a non-monetary A.J. McDonnell Student Teaching Award to outstanding student teachers.

From 1962 until his passing in 1985, McDonnell was associated with teacher education — as a professor of education and supervisor of student teachers, as department chairperson of the department of secondary education from 1971 to 1983, and as assistant chairperson of the department of curriculum and foundations from 1983 to 1985. McDonnell's influence as both educator and friend touched the lives of both students and colleagues. Many of his students have enjoyed successful careers in education, business, and industry.

McDonnell also unselfishly gave countless hours of service to the university, town, and region. He was instrumental in helping to raise funds to support Bloomsburg's Town Park, and he was very active in the Bloomsburg Kiwanis. Before coming to the university, McDonnell taught in the Warren, Pa. schools.

Three of McDonnell's children are Bloomsburg graduates. Thomas '77, Ellen McDonnell Vought '81 and Mary McDonnell '87. The fourth, Arthur, is an accountant for Bloomsburg University.

Frank Golder

The Frank Golder Scholarship, named in honor of one of the university's and the Town of Bloomsburg's favorite sons, will help provide a BU student athlete with the opportunity to obtain a college education. This special tribute to a favored and revered teacher at the Bloomsburg High School (BHS) is a new scholarship initiative for Bloomsburg University.

For forty years this BU graduate directly affected the lives of countless Bloomsburg High School students during his tenure as teacher, coach, and principal. In the classroom, Golder was a respected English teacher, and his guidance was sought by many students. A very popular, successful coach, his basketball teams caused opponents much trepidation. As principal, he guided the BHS community through the turbulent late 1960s and early 1970s.

Established as an endowed scholarship, this initiative combines the mutual interests of high school graduates with those of a specific BU graduate. Very positive initial responses and enthusiastic comments have encouraged the university officials to pursue this scholarship opportunity.

Golder's students continue to harbor many good feelings about him and the influence he had on them. To show their appreciation, many of the high school reunion classes are uniting to contribute to the Golder Scholarship. Sally McCloskey and Frances Johnson, BHS class of '51, are spearheading the efforts of their classmates and other BHS graduates. Reunion classes for the next five years will be asked to participate. Information will be sent to each member of reunion classes interested in this tribute.

Trust for Generations campaign passes $3.5 million

Gifts, pledges, and planned gifts now total slightly more than $3.5 million set for the university's Trust for Generations campaign. As of July, $2.4 million has been received.

"Response to the Trust has been very strong. We are deeply gratified that our alumni and friends are showing their confidence in Bloomsburg University by generously supporting this important effort," said President Harry Ausprich.

The Trust includes a $1.0 million goal for library enhancement, $1.0 million for academic scholarships, and $1.5 for academic excellence. Approximately $800,000 has been received for each of these categories.

This fall, callers for the Parents' Fund drive will be contacting parents of BU students. Parents will be asked to make a gift to one of The Trust for Generations categories. To date, parents have made a commitment of more than $191,900 in gifts and pledges.

"BU parents have been wonderful," Ausprich continued. "They want the best education and environment we can provide for their daughters and sons, and they are willing to make the extra sacrifice needed to help assure the university maintains its academic standing."

The class of 1991 also has made a commitment to The Trust for Generations by pledging $16,500 to the "Class of 1991 Library.

Provost announces administrative reorganization

Provost Betty Allamong has announced a reorganization in academic affairs to "save" three faculty positions left vacant by fiscal constraints during the 1990-1991 academic year.

Allamong has reassigned responsibilities in her area to cover the workloads of student outcomes assessment, international education, and learning resources directorships that will remain vacant for the present time.

Cooper

Under the academic division's new organizational chart, Dr. Tom Cooper, former dean of enrollment management, will serve as assistant vice president for academic affairs and will coordinate Student Outcomes Assessment. The Department of Developmental Instruction and Act 101/Educational Opportunity Programs will report to Cooper, whose previous position has been eliminated.

In addition Bernie Vinovrski's title has been changed from director of admissions to director of admissions and records with the registrar reporting to him.

Vinovrski will report to Charles Carlson, assistant vice president for academic affairs, along with the directors of Haas and Carver Halls, Upward Bound, Student Support Services, Tutorial 504 Services, Academic Advisement, and the dean of the university's School of Extended Programs.

Michael Vavrek, dean of the School of Extended Programs, will head the areas of Non-degree and Adult Programs and Services, Army ROTC, and Cooperative Education/Academic Internships.

John Abell, assistant dean, will coordinate International Education, Non-credit Programs and Services and the Magee Center.

A new department, Audio Visual Resources, has become a component of the TV/Radio Services department, headed by Tom Joseph, and replaces the Learning Resources Center.

Orchestra offers 'Symphony at Sea'

The Bloomsburg University-Community Orchestra is pleased to host its second "Symphony at Sea," a seven-day trip to St. Maarten, St. John, St. Thomas and Pleasure Island, the Bahamas, aboard the S. S. Norway. The symphony will perform shipboard and in St. Thomas. Dates of the trip are June 20-27, 1992.

The orchestra will present at least one concert on board ship and a second performance on one of the islands.

"Students, faculty, staff members, alumni and residents of the greater Bloomsburg community are invited to join us for the cruise," said Mark Jelinek, assistant professor of music and orchestra director since 1986.

Discounted group rates of 20 to 25 percent, which includes the cruise, roundtrip bus transportation from Bloomsburg to Harrisburg International Airport, and roundtrip airfare from Harrisburg to Miami, are available.

The orchestra has existed periodically in various states throughout the 152-year history of the university. It took its final shape in 1971 when Dr. John Master revived the group.

The orchestra has been growing and improving in quality ever since it began as a small chamber orchestra of mainly community members and some university students. The ensemble consists of 60-70 university students, college professors and community members who perform music mainly from the major symphony orchestra repertoire.

New degree focuses on 'quality of life for elderly people'

A new master's degree program in exercise science and adult fitness were approved at the July 17 meeting of the BU Council of Trustees.

Linda LeMura and William Sproule of the health, physical education and athletics department reported on the new graduate program "that will concentrate on improving the quality of life for elderly people."

National studies reveal greater numbers of elderly people will need programs that respond specifically to their health and medical problems.

"We're experiencing a change in demographics in this country which shows that people are living longer," LeMura said.

The master of science degree program in exercise science and adult fitness will allow the institution to strengthen its role as a public service resource center, as suggested in the school's mission statement, said LeMura. The program will enable the university to develop health science programs and enhance relationships with local and regional health care centers.

"A major focus of this program will be to address the needs of those people who have been victimized by the nation's number one killer . . . heart disease," she said.

Career opportunities in exercise science and adult fitness are anticipated to increase throughout the current decade and into the next century. The job market will expand to medical centers, hospitals and other health care organizations that offer rehabilitation programs.

LeMura hopes the university can begin offering courses toward the 36-credit-hour program soon. "If it's approved at the State System level, Bloomsburg could begin offering one or two classes in the M.S. program as early as next spring," she said.

The curriculum will be reviewed in Harrisburg by the SSHE Board of Governors at its fall meeting in October.

a three-yard pass from quarterback Bret Comp to wide receiver Ken Kopetchny for a 23-21 victory on the last play of the game. The 1991 game will be the 65th game of the series dating back to the 1927 season.

As members of the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference, an NCAA Division II conference, the two games will be the highest level collegiate football played in the astro-turfed facility. The Philadelphia Phillies' top farm team plays its baseball games in the stadium and has drawn big crowds to the contests, despite poor records. The facility is one of the best multi-purpose stadiums of its size in the country.

The football field will be aligned so one sideline runs along the first base line and down into the right field corner. One endzone corner is near home plate and the endline follows the third baseline into short left field. The opposite endzone has one corner near the right field foul pole and the endline extends along the outfield fence toward center field. While the seats for football games in baseball stadiums are generally not as good as for baseball, the viewing lines in Lackawanna Stadium are quite good. The biggest problem area for seating is the lower level in the left field corner. These seats will be the last sold, but to ensure good seats get your orders in early.

This two game series may be the start of a whole new rivalry between the Huskies and the Warriors. Don't miss the action!

Speaker urges culturally diverse program for children

Edwinna Vold, a professor of education at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, said teachers have "a moral and ethical responsibility to provide a culturally diverse program for children" who attend pre-schools and day care centers.

Vold spoke at an Early Childhood Education Conference at BU in June.

Vold

In her discussion on "Math and Science from a Multicultural Perspective," Vold said a multicultural education "is the best way to promote equitable aptitudes regardless of race, sex, ethnicity and class."

"Children in early childhood years need to examine their behaviors and attitudes with regard to the growing diversity in our population," noted the chairperson of IUP's professional studies and education department.

"I think math and science are two areas in which we can bring that to fruition."

According to Vold, the launching of the Soviet satellite, Sputnik, prompted an investigation into the teaching of science and math in the United States.

"The American public was concerned that the United States had slipped behind the Russians in the space race," she said, "and the findings after Sputnik revealed that science and math were being poorly taught."

Now, some 40 years later, Vold claims there has been little done to change the way science and math are taught in this country.

"I am horrified to walk into classrooms today and find that teaching mathematics is still (based on) memorization, and science is still being taught out of a textbook."

In addition, Vold stressed that a multicultural education should not be confused with "minority studies" or be viewed as "for minorities only." Rather, it is education "which values cultural pluralism . . . and affirms that schools should be oriented toward the cultural enhancement of all children and youth through programs rooted to the preservation and extension of cultural alternatives," she said. "I recognizes cultural diversity as a fact of life in Americn society, and it's a valuable resource."

Vold believes a monocultural approach to education is detrimental. "There is a critical need to prepare teachers at all levels to be sensitive to the needs of sub-populations within a pluralistic society," she said. "This intervention strategy (of multicultural education) is what I believe can offer children a way to move into the year 2000 with the ability to live interdependently and in harmony with other groups.

Sponsored by the Pennsylvania Department of Education, the two-day conference, held at BU for the first time, was directed by John Hranitz, professor of early childhood education and assistant chairperson of the Department of Curriculum and Foundations.

"The early childhood conference was a huge success at Bloomsburg this year, and I hope the Department of Education will consider scheduling future conferences here at the university," he said.

Child's social skills brought from home affects performance

A child's attitude and performance in school can hinge on social skills acquired before he or she enters a classroom, according to early childhood education expert Ann Baldwin-Taylor, who spoke at an Early Childhood Education Conference at Bloomsburg recently.

Speaking on "Effective Beginnings in Developing Competencies in Children," the director of the Children's School at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh told more than 150 conferees the social skills of children have "oftentimes been put into the background" by pre-school educators.

Baldwin-Taylor

"Sometimes, as educators, we forget that learning begins long before a child sets foot inside your classroom or (day care) center," Baldwin-Taylor said, noting that many teachers forget the importance of the social skills their pupils should have learned from their upbringing at home.

Baldwin-Taylor said teachers are used to measuring the performance of their pupils by testing them in school, but they've done little work in helping their youngsters learn how to be friendly and cooperative with others.

"Friendless children . . . suffer from low self-esteem and provide ample evidence that their unhappiness is due to their social inadequacy," she noted, "and this tends to short-circuit all of their success in school."

Before entering the first grade, children usually have learned how to be friendly and cooperative with other people, said Baldwin-Taylor, however, this is becoming the ideal circumstance.

"Unless children learn from us (teachers) how to make friends, it is likely that they will continue to perform at lower levels, and many times they will become behavioral problems both in and out of the classroom," she said.

"These children who are rejected by their classmates . . . are the ones who hold less favorable attitudes about school, always perform at lower levels, and have an increasing avoidance behavior," she added. "They're the ones who eventually leave the school."

Baldwin-Taylor said children can be taught how to love themselves, read the behavior of others, communicate with words, and risk failure as part of their "growing up" experience.

"These are taught skills," she said. "Children do not get them from the grace of God. As educators, we need to teach children the skills which will enable them to be socially successful . . . and the earlier the intervention the better."

She prescribes teaching these skills through socio-dramatic play and face-to-face interaction which will help to make language understandable to children.

"I'd encourage having a lot of dramatic play, show and tell where children show you what certain things mean."

In addition, Baldwin-Taylor said pre-school teachers should emphasize words with rhythm and inflection, stressing the items or ideas being discussed as though they are making an announcement.

"It's terribly important that children be taught how to communicate," she said.

Sponsored by the Pennsylvania Department of Education, the two-day conference, held for the first time at BU, was directed by John Hranitz, professor of early childhood education and assistant chairperson of the university's Department of Curriculum and Foundations.

Grant will fund interactive co-op ed video demo project

BU's cooperative education program has received a $100,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to fund an interactive video demonstration project designed to enhance the marketing of co-op's benefits to college students.

"We hope to create an interactive video piece that will explain what cooperative education is all about to four-year university students, and inspire them to get involved in the program before they graduate," says JoAnne Day, director of cooperative education and internships.

Cooperative education, an educational work experience program offered by approximately 1,000 colleges and universities nationwide, provides students an opportunity to work in employee-paid positions related to their academic major or career interest.

Day

According to Day, some of the grant money will be used to purchase an IBM based interactive video system for the university's cooperative education office. But most of the budget will go toward hiring half-time technical staff personnel.

"We'll need to hire a project manager, designer and programmer," she says.

In an effort to get the project underway this fall, Day has enlisted the assistance of the university's Institute for Interactive Technologies. Hank Bailey, mathematics and computer science professor, who directs the IIT, and his staff will help design, develop, and produce the interactive video program.

"We have the hardware in the IIT . . . to develop a prototype that would be focused primarily for use at the university," says Bailey.

In addition to giving a general explanation of cooperative education, Day says the video project will provide students with specific information regarding local co-op opportunities that link with their respective major.

"Students can also receive information on prospective employers," she adds.

The project staff will profile a minimum of 10 Bloomsburg academic majors by the end of the funding year, "but we're aiming to make the project generic enough so students from other colleges and universities who major in different subjects can use the video program, too," she says.

Day hopes to have at least seven area businesses profiled in the program by next August. Northumberland County Human Services, TRW of Danville, and Air Products and Chemicals, Inc. of Allentown have expressed interest in getting involved with this project, she says.

Both Day and Bailey are hoping the Department of Education will approve two more years of funding for this project, which could amount to grants totaling an additional $200,000 during the 1992-1993 and 1993-1994 academic years.

Day says she must submit another proposal for phase two in December. "In the second year, we would work to complete an expanded version of the video program that would include more academic majors and regional businesses and industries."

Funding for the third year would permit Day and Bailey to "nationalize the project" through marketing, reproducing, and disseminating at least 100 videodisks throughout the country, she says.

"In the third year, we would be attending conferences and training sessions to demonstrate how other institutions can use this resource to enhance their co-op programs," she says.

But for now, the duo will focus on creating the "limited version" of the project after they buy a new interactive video system.

"We want to develop something innovative and unique that will enhance cooperative education," she says.

Lorraine Ausprich wins state gifted teaching award

By Joan T. Lentczner

Tireless. Creative. Exemplary leader. Innovative. These are the words that describe the teacher who recently won a state honor for her work in gifted education. During a recent interview, Lorraine Ausprich, wife of President Harry Ausprich, reflected on the gifted program which she developed five years ago at Millville Elementary and High School and watched grow to nearly 100 students today.

Ausprich

Building self-esteem in her students is clearly a focus that drives her teaching. A graduate of the State University of New York at Buffalo, Ausprich holds certification in elementary education and high school language arts.

Working with 80 to 100 students — kindergarten through 12th grades — a day, she is painfully aware of how labels can tear down self-esteem and how low self-esteem can impact negatively on one's desire to learn. "What does it mean to be labeled gifted, slow learner, jock, smart, princess? They can all work against you depending on your mindset — your level of self-esteem, she says, holding a green leather-bound folder in her lap.

The cover bears a gold seal of the Senate of Pennsylvania. Inside, the document from the Senate of Pennsylvania extends congratulations to her for being named the "best teacher of gifted students" by the Pennsylvania Association of Gifted Education (PAGE) last April. A letter, signed by Senator Edward W. Helfrick, conveys congratulations to her from Helfrick and his colleagues in the Senate.

The honor is the second one she has received by PAGE. The first, four years ago, recognized the humanitarian project four of her high school students developed in communicating to social science classes what is meant by special education. Special education, her students found, "means anything that's beyond the regular core curriculum, such as sports or drama as well as remedial classes," she says. "Anything you do outside of your routine day is considered special education."

"What does it mean to be a remedial student?" This student needs help with developmental skills. As she explains, she is reminded of the words "lean on me." Special education students are no different from the rest of us in the sense that "we all need each other," she says. "We're all walking around with special needs that must be addressed."

The purpose of the study was to "sensitize the student body to know its all right to have special needs," says Ausprich. And they accomplished their goal. The project "helped everybody feel more comfortable about each other," she says.

Ausprich teaches seventh-grade enrichment reading, eighth-grade language arts, ninth-grade language arts and leadership, and 10th grade humanities seminar. That takes care of her mornings. She devotes her afternoons to the elementary program, teaching five preparations to a different grade level each day.

The native of Buffalo commends the documentation in a portfolio compiled by six of her ninth-graders who supported her nomination for this distinguished state award — one of three given annually by PAGE. "I'm very proud of my students and the work they put into this document." A member of the association called it "a beautifully meshed together portfolio."

Ausprich, cited by her elementary principal, Dr. Lorraine Young, as an innovative educator who typifies the creativeness of the teaching staff at the school, is "a leader in the district," she says.

At Kent State University, where her husband served as dean of the College of Fine and Professional Arts for seven years before moving to Bloomsburg in 1985, Ausprich studied with two national leaders in gifted education: Dr. James DeLisle, author of Gifted Children Speak Out, and Dr. Joanne Rand Whitmore, author of Giftedness, Conflict and Underachievement.

As an initiator and innovator in her field, Ausprich offers challenges beyond prescribed levels of learning. In other words, she goes beyong tests and textbooks to give high school students the freedom to develop their talents and thinking skills. "I require them to make a product after they have conducted an investigation and analysis of research that challenges them. They present their findings to a group, share their own thoughts about what they've created and what they have discovered in their research."

Ausprich credits the administrators and school directors for the supportive role they have played in her efforts. "They have given me the freedom to develop the program."

Her family are her most loyal supporters. "From the day we arrived here, they encouraged me to pursue a professional career," says Ausprich.

"I was very proud and pleased to watch my wife step up on that platform and be recognized for the positive influence she has played in her students' lives," said President Ausprich. He joined his wife, her six students and both principals, including high school principal Dan Chandler, at the awards luncheon at the Hilton Hotel in Harrisburg.

The Ausprich daughters, Sarah and Emily, were excited about their mother receiving the award, but they were unable to attend the luncheon. Sarah was a student at Kent State University in Ohio, where she was accepted into the Honors College as a freshman last year and is majoring in history and political science. Emily, who is enrolled as a freshman at Bloomsburg University this fall and plans to study business, was attending classes at Bloomsburg High School.

It's not often a president's spouse steps into the limelight. For a brief time, their roles were reversed. Sharing this moment together was truly a satisfying experience.

levels. In particular, the Advisory Board offers suggestions for possible curricular changes that will keep students abreast of ever-changing needs, and it often advises BU about other corporations that might employ BU graduates, support internship opportunities, or participate in the Professional Development Forum. The Advisory Board also sponsors a yearly golf outing to raise funds to support a variety of College of Business projects. Information about the golf outing is available from the Development Office, Carver Hall.

Alumni who work for international corporations are another important source of speakers and internship opportunities. As this aspect of the business program grows, assistance from these alumni will become increasingly valuable.

Monetary gifts to the College of Business from alumni and friends help provide instructional support, student travel to student professional meetings, the Professional Development Forum, and joint faculty and student research projects. In kind gifts such as computer software, computer hardware, or books also enhance the learning environment. Many companies match gifts made by its employees. This program is a great way to double or triple the value of a gift. Several companies which employ a number of Bloomsburg alumni have created named scholarships or made in kind gifts in support of Bloomsburg's academic program.

Looking to the future, Dean Matteson envisions greater involvement of the College of Business Advisory Board in long-term planning for the College and building new and stronger relationships with external constituencies that can augment current College of Business initiatives. Specially funded projects for library resources, for the Professional Development Forum, and for new scholarship opportunities will be other ways that alumni can help the College of Business.

Both Matteson and the College of Business faculty are grateful for the many gifts from alumni and corporate donors which help the College meet its students' needs. Its alumni play a very special part in the success of the College of Business and its graduates.

College of Business alumni, alumni from other disciplines, and members of the business community at large who would like to help the university in these ways simply need to express such a desire. Individuals who would like more information about ways to become involved at Bloomsburg are invited to contact Dean Carol Matteson, Sutliff Hall, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815, or call (717) 389-4109.

Endowment Fund." According to class president, Damien Dinen, class members will participate in the selection of volumes to be acquired. Graduates pledged amounts ranging from $100 to $300 to be fulfilled over the next five years.

"When students make commitments like this, we know they already recognize the value of their education and are willing to help assure that future generations will enjoy the best Bloomsburg can offer," Ausprich said.

Begun in 1989, the five-year campaign will be completed in 1994.

Faculty-Staff campaign sets new participation record

A new record was set this spring when 25 percent of BU's faculty and staff participated in the 1991 Faculty and Staff for Excellence campaign. In addition to these 214 employees, including Community Activities staff, another 27 employees contributed to other BU fundraising campaigns. A total of $16,254.90 was received in gifts and pledges.

As a result of the focus of the campaign on student scholarships, nine new awards will be presented in 1992. These new scholarship opportunities testify to the belief that investing in students is indeed an investment in our collective futures. For the first year, awards will be $250 each.

Two scholarship options, BU Family Relatives and BU Undergraduate Students, within the new BU Family Scholarship category, were created. A total of $1,295 was received for these options. An additional $4,127 was given to four new departmental scholarships created for undergraduate students. These are in the Departments of Business Education/Office Administration, Languages and Cultures, Extended Programs, and Curriculum and Foundations (in memory of A. J. McDonnell).

Contributions were also designated for The Trust for Generations, Husky Club athletic scholarships, the President's Ball, and other specifically named programs.

The campaign was supported this year by the effort of approximately 60 faculty and staff who served as liaison contacts between their colleagues and coworkers and the development office staff. A special advisory committee to the development office staff will help design the 1992 campaign.

Major renovations = enhanced facilities

Written by Kevin Engler, Director of News and Media Relations at Bloomsburg University

Bloomsburg University has begun a $16 million facelift which includes major renovations to three buildings and the installation of elevators, ramps and other handicapped-access facilities.

"It's probably the greatest growth period that the university has ever experienced," said Donald McCulloch, director of the physical plant.

Construction started early this summer on the renovation of Kehr Union, Hartline Science Center and Scranton Commons.

Smaller projects which include installing elevators in four buildings, replacing the roofs of four buildings and constructing curbs, ramps and power doors for the physically impaired have also begun.

In addition, Bloomsburg is in the process of designing a $6.6 million student recreation center and will begin a steam and energy conservation project this fall.

"The university has grown to the point where we've placed a strain on the facilities and grounds," said Robert Parrish, vice president for administration. "We're simply trying to catch up ... and satisfy the needs of our student body."

According to Parrish, many of the projects are being funded through the university's operating budget or will be deferred from future energy savings. Bloomsburg students are chipping in to pay for renovating Kehr Union and erecting the recreation center, he said.

"What's significant about all this activity is that only about 10 percent of the money is coming from state capital funding," Parrish noted.

Renovation, expansion will double size of Kehr Union

The board of governors of the State System of Higher Education approved nearly $8.7 million last fall for Bloomsburg to renovate and expand Kehr Union.

Funds for the project were previously approved by Bloomsburg students in a vote taken in September 1989. The referendum increases student union fees by $50 per semester — from $10 to $60 — beginning this fall.

According to McCulloch, plans call for a complete shutdown of the present facility for a period of 15 months to fully renovate and expand the union.

"This project will double the size of the existing building," McCulloch said, noting that expansion will add nearly 41,000 square feet of space to the 43,000 square feet the building encompasses at present.

"The new union building will be about the size of McCormick," he added, referring to the university's McCormick Human Services Center.

McCulloch said expansion will provide room for "several additions" to the union. "There will be a 'high (20 feet) ceiling' multipurpose room suitable for showing movies and holding other activities that currently have to be scheduled in Carver or Haas auditoriums," he said.

Other improvements include an enlarged snack bar area, a large lounge with a fireplace, a computer lab for students and a fire protection, or "sprinkler," system.

In addition, the Health Center and Career Development Center will be relocated inside the union, and six more conference rooms will also be added to the new facility, he said.

Named in honor of the late Marguerite W. Kehr, who served the institution as dean of women from 1928 to 1953, the building opened in 1973 and houses two formal lounges and multi-purpose rooms, a snack bar and dining area, a game room, a television room, an automatic bank teller machine, a mailroom with mailboxes for commuter students, an information center and offices for student and community activities' organizations.

McCulloch said the university has provided alternative locations for the services offered in Kehr Union during the renovation period. "We've renovated the back of the University Book Store and turned it into a snack bar and student function area," he said.

"We expect to have the union back in service for the fall semester of 1992," he added.

Construction project will relieve overcrowded Scranton Commons

Construction on a $1.3 million renovation and expansion project for Scranton Commons began in June.

The two-story addition features atriums on the southwest (along Second St.) and northeast (adjacent to Kehr Union) corners of the building.

The southwest atrium will serve as the new Pennsylvania Room — a 65 to 70 seat faculty dining area — while the northeast facility will extend Dining Room C by providing an additional 175 seats.

ARA Inc., Bloomsburg's food service operation, will offer a "five-star" dining option to students, said Jennie Carpenter, assistant vice president for residence and student life. "This option will allow our students to purchase gourmet meals for a cheaper price with their meal ticket," she said.

Carpenter said a "quick serve" eatery — featuring salads, sandwiches, pastries and nachos — will be built in the lobby of Dining Rooms C and D. Students can also purchase pizza at Itza Pizza which is located in the lobby of Dining Rooms A and B. "These eateries are very popular at other schools, so I hope they will be here, too," she noted.

In addition, the former faculty dining area will be converted into offices for ARA, said Carpenter.

Funding for the project has been provided through the university's food service auxiliary budget.

"The renovation project should be completed by the middle of the fall semester and will relieve the crowdedness in the Commons," she added.

Hartline to house more offices, new teaching laboratories

A $2.4 million renovation of Hartline Science Center, which began in May, is scheduled to be completed later this year.

The first phase of the project, involving the renovation of science teaching labs and faculty offices in the building's north wing (near Andruss Library) "should be finished by the start of the fall semester," said chemistry professor Lawrence L. Mack.

According to Mack, who is serving as the faculty liaison for this project, classrooms in Hartline will be better ventilated and most faculty members will have an individual office.

"Earth science and biology professors will have new offices," said Mack, noting that many professors were forced to share office space in the past.

"No one will be doubled up," he noted, adding that a yet-to-be-approved second phase of the project would add another wing to the building.

Funding for the phase one has been provided through the university's operating budget.

State funding provides enhancements for physically impaired individuals

Bloomsburg is installing ramps, curbs, elevators and power doors in strategic areas on campus in an effort to make the university better suited for physically impaired individuals.

"We want to make our hilly terrain more accessible to persons with physical limitations," said Parrish, noting that these enhancements were appropriated by the Commonwealth within the last two years.

At a cost of nearly $900,000, six elevators are being installed in four campus buildings — one each in Carver and Navy Halls and two in Nelson Field House and Haas Center for the Arts.

The installation of more power doors in university buildings and constructing outdoor curbs and ramps around the campus will cost approximately $700,000. "Funding for this project was appropriated by the state last year," Parrish said.

Roofing, energy conservation scheduled this summer, fall

Four campus facilities — Centennial Gym, Hartline, Magee Center and Waller Administration Building — are undergoing roofing projects this year at a total cost of nearly $425,000.

"Bloomsburg has received special deferred maintenance allocations from the state as part of our operating budget to fund these projects," said Parrish.

And this fall, the university will conduct a project titled "summer shutdown" which will help conserve energy. "We'll be putting individual boilers in the larger buildings on campus, like the dormitories, and place hot water heaters in the smaller buildings," he said.

"This will enable us to shut the steam plant down," he added, noting the university has estimated energy savings of approximately $250,000.

Trustees approve proposal for construction of recreation center

Construction of a $6.6 million student recreation center on the lower campus was approved by Bloomsburg's council of trustees at its July 17 quarterly meeting at the Magee Center.

Funding for the 75,000 square-foot facility — featuring a large arena that includes a 200-meter running track and four basketball courts — will be provided by an increase in student activities fees starting in the fall of 1992.

In a referendum last spring, students voted to assess themselves an additional $60 per semester to pay for the facility, said John Trathen, director of student activities.

"No state money will be used on this project," said Trathen, referring to the university's state appropriations (Educational and General) budget.

Maintenance and post-construction operations will also be provided by the fee increase, he added.

The center will include four intramural size basketball courts that can be converted into volleyball and tennis courts, six racquetball courts, a large multipurpose room for aerobics and dance, a Nautilus room, a free-weight room, an exercise room, a lounge, locker and shower facilities and administrative offices.

Bloomsburg's varsity athletic teams schedule intercollegiate events and practices in the two existing athletic facilities — Centennial Gym and Nelson Field House — on campus.

Other students who wish to work out and exercise during the school year will have more access to recreational facilities in the new center, said Trathen.

"The center will ease the overcrowded situations which currently exist in Centennial and Nelson," he added.

"It's probably the greatest growth period that the university has ever experienced."

Dear Diary:

University Archivist Roger Fromm would like to hear from any alumni who kept a diary while attending Bloomsburg. The archives has just one such diary (kept by a student from 1869 to 1871) and would like to chronicle any other years with the same type of material.

If the diary cannot be donated, Fromm can arrange to have it or the Bloomsburg portions photocopied. Also, any donor can prohibit the diary's use for a specified number of years.

BU selected as hub campus for national volunteer effort

The Student Volunteer Services program at Bloomsburg University as been selected as Pennsylvania's "hub campus" for a nationwide outreach and coalition-building effort geared toward increasing the number of college students involved in community service activities.

The program, "Into the Streets," will be formally launched on Friday, November 1, by its national sponsor — the Campus Outreach Opportunity League (COOL) headquartered at the University of Minnesota in St. Paul.

COOL estimates that thousands of college students from across the nation will go "into the streets" to become more aware of needy individuals who live in the communities nearest their campus and offer their assistance for a day of service in agencies including homeless shelters, hospitals, day care and senior citizen centers.

"COOL has established this unique program in an effort to enhance community service by building a broad-based coalition of colleges and universities nationwide," says Robert Peiffer, coordinator of BU's volunteer services program.

"Bloomsburg University has been acknowledged as a national leader in this movement because thousands of our students have had at least one experience in community service," Peiffer notes.

The university was chosen as one of 50 hub campuses — one in each state — to assist two-year and four-year institutions who need help in starting a volunteer community service program on their campuses.

Peiffer and two student volunteers attended a special training program for hub campuses which was part of this year's COOL Summit in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

"This enabled us to receive some advance training, and provided our students with an opportunity to get some leadership responsibilities," he says.

"Into the Streets" is funded by a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Michigan.

Prof on team which found living bacteria in mastodon

A Bloomsburg University anthropology professor was one of seven scientists who announced in May they have found living bacteria they think were present in the intestines of a four-ton mastodon 11,000 years ago.

Wymer

Preserved with a skeleton dug up in Newark, Ohio, the remains yielded important clues to the diet of this extinct Ice Age mammal, a distant relative to the elephant.

Dee Anne Wymer, the only Pennsylvania scientist on the team, identified the plant remains found in the intestinal mass. And team member J. Gordon Ogden of Dalhousie University in Nova Scotia "confirmed this by examining plant pollen in the tartar removed from the mastodon's teeth," said Wymer.

"If this is the original 11,000 year-old bacteria, it will allow biologists to do DNA studies of the bacteria and look at the rate of evolution," said Wymer during an interview. "Not all of the bacteria have been identified," she said.

The discovery in December 1989 was reported at a May 3 press conference in Newark, Ohio. On May 4, The New York Times reported the discovery "could upset some theories of what drove the mastodons to extinction."

The mastodon remains were excavated by a team of scientists led by Bradley Lepper, an archeologist with the Ohio Historical Society.

Wymer credits what biologists claimed to be the "first recovery of living bacteria to have survived from an extinct species" to the "foresight of Lepper, who froze the contents immediately. He recognized the importance."

The living bacteria "shed light on the mastodons' environment and what they ate," said Wymer. The bacteria has been identified as Enterobacter cloacae.

According to Daniel C. Fisher, a mastodon specialist on the team, the findings include important clues to the diet of these extinct Ice Age mammals.

Fisher, a paleontologist at the University of Michigan, reported twigs and needles of conifers, particularly spruce, were believed to be part of the mastodon's diet. However, their absence in the intestinal contents "calls into question the theory that mastodons became extinct when the spruce forest retreated as the climate warmed 10,000 years ago," he said in the Times article.

Scientists found in the mastodon's "last meal" evidence of swamp grass, moss, leaves, seeds and water lilies.

"There is even evidence that the animal was butchered by inhabitants of North America," said Wymer. "I didn't believe it (the human-animal interaction) until Fisher convinced me."

Wymer has been working with the Murphy Archaeological Research Group at the excavation site in Newark for two years.

"We're doing science the right way," she said. "We have done careful analyses using many different researchers with different expertise. We submitted the official paper outlining the research project to the Quaternary Research, a science journal."

The referees who recommended the paper for publication "were ecstatic," she said.

It's the best time at that distance by an American over 40 and was better than the PIAA winning time in the two-mile (3200 meters) that year.

Prosseda

His three-mile time of 14:29 is also the third-fastest in the world and the best by an American.

His 5,000 meter time of 15:04 is the fifth-best in the world and better than the winning time in the National High School cross country championships.

As a runner in his college days, he achieved All-American status in the three-mile run. He finished second, one second behind the winner, and his time was three seconds slower than the best time ever. He also ran the fifth-best time in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and ran a 4:07 mile in 1965 at Long Beach, California.

At Bloomsburg, he was a six-time Pennsylvania State College champion and was a record holder in the one and two-mile runs, while never losing a meet race in high school or college. With a 76-0 dual meet record, he is the only runner in the U.S. known to have accomplished that feat.

Prosseda is one of the few track athletes inducted into the BU Athletic Hall of Fame (1988), and he was named the outstanding athlete at Bloomsburg in 1965.

In 1984 he ran the fastest times ever in Master's competition in the two-mile and three-mile runs. He registered a third-best ever time in the 3,000 meter steeplechase at the National Master's Championships in Eugene, Oregon. With that effort, he became the only runner in U.S. history to achieve All-American college and All-American master's status.

A year later, he was the only American qualifier for the World Master's Championships at the Olympic Stadium in Rome (site of the 1960 Olympics).

Prosseda has not limited himself to running. He placed third in the Eastern Pennsylvania Powerlifting Championships and was fifth in the Mr. Eastern Pennsylvania Physique contest in 1965.

'Picasso of picture books' shares recipe for his work

Sharing his recipe of "chaotic ingredients" that go into manufacturing a children's picture book, artist Maurice Sendak told a large Bloomsburg audience that reading fantasy stories is "being in touch" with the child living in all of us.

Sendak

"It's not a big, fancy artistic trick to be in touch with childhood," said the internationally acclaimed author and illustrator during a rare public appearance.

"I seem to be blessed, or cursed, with very vivid and often lurid memories of childhood."

In addressing his large following among college age individuals and older adults, Sendak said his picture books "aren't especially intended for children." But since they don't fit the mold of adult literature, "there's no place to put them except on the children's shelves.

"Kids are very, very ferocious as an audience. They are extremely tough in their condemnation and their affection," Sendak said, describing their tastes as "more varying, more subtle, and more defined" than those adults.

Sendak, who has earned a reputation as "the Picasso of picture books," reflected on the rich palette of his own youth. As the sickly, youngest son of an immigrant family in Brooklyn, N.Y., he developed a keen eye and ear for childhood fears, fantasies, and unvarnished observations.

Coping with overly affectionate relatives, the kind that "mauled you," gave Sendak inspiration to write his best-selling book, Where the Wild Things Are, published in 1963. Seven years later, he would draw on a potpourri of children's recollections — from King Kong and Mickey Mouse to the "traumatic experience" of getting lost at the Uneeda Biscuit display at the 1939 World's Fair — to write another book, In the Night Kitchen.

The third book of his trilogy, Outside Over There, appeared in 1981. The book was inspired by Sendak's other memories, including kidnapping of Charles Lindbergh's infant son, the national fascination with the Dionne quintuplets, and a dark fairy tale by the Brothers Grimm.

Wildly popular with millions of readers, the triology and other Sendak books have provoked considerable controversy. Early reviews attacked Where the Wild Things Are as ugly and depraved. The book, however, won the Caldecott Medal, the highest graphic award in the industry, and "almost overnight it became an all right book," he recalled.

Describing his original passion in life as music, Sendak said he switched careers 11 years ago and became a stage designer for operas because it was a "chance to get closer" to his hero, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Designing the set for the Houston production of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" was a "dream come true," said Sendak. But, as the deadline approached, it also became a nightmare. "When the dream becomes a nightmare, you begin the creative process," he noted. The process is almost indistinguishable from a nervous breakdown or severe depression.

"The muse will not fall from heaven on your drawing paper. You have to seek her out." He said he has done much of his own seeking in visual art, music and literature, composers, writers and poets.

His second career was another "nightmare," recalled Sendak, describing his early life as a poor scholar, probably dyslexic, who struggled in the wake of a brilliant brother and sister. He didn't go to college because he "never realized college could be a place of freedom."

Said Sendak, "I fell out of the system. Maybe that helped me in a brutal way."

The artist showed slides to offer a guided tour of his latest book, Dear Milli, an intricately illustrated version of a recently discovered Grimm Brothers story. Released last year, the book tells the poignant story of a young girl lost in the forest of a war-torn country.

"She's trapped in a bad moment in history," explained Sendak, who once again used the book to express intimate experiences and influences in his own life.

Using a light pen, Sendak pointed out page details ranging from his dogs and flowers in his Connecticut garden to tiny tombstones in memory of his own family.

Mozart is there, of course, playing in the background for a shadowy audience of children from the Holocaust.

Middle States accepts BU's progress report

The Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools recently reaffirmed accreditation for Bloomsburg University after accepting a progress report from the institution in April.

"We were pleased to receive notification from the commission on our report," said President Harry Ausprich at the quarterly meeting of the university's council of trustees. He also noted that the report detailed "institutional progress on the operation of a strategic planning process."

The university's report addressed specific concerns identified by the commission in conjunction with its on-site evaluation of the institution in April 1989.

"We were asked to give information on the status of our library . . . goals and objectives . . . and planning," said Betty D. Allamong, provost and vice president for academic affairs, "and the commission accepted our follow-up report without reservation."

Construction of a new university library, estimated to cost $11.4 million, has been a top priority in Bloomsburg's capital budget request to the State System of Higher Education since 1986. Funding to build a new library has been appraoved by Gov. Casey. Due to Pennsylvania's current budgetary problems, however, the funds from the state have not been released.

"The commission is concerned that construction has not started on a new library at Bloomsburg," Allamong said, "but they know that we have worked diligently to bring this about."

In response to the commission's request for information that demonstrates strategic planning and goal-setting at the university, Allamong said "we have implemented strategic direction statements." She noted in February 1990 the university adopted four objectives that deal with curriculum, puhlic service, enrollment and cultural diversity.

"Our follow-up report documented these statements clearly," she said.

Allamong indicated the university administers periodic internal evaluations to maintain the integrity of its programs.

"We conduct routine self-study evaluations every five years, regardless of whether or not we have a formal outside accrediting agency coming in to look at them," she said.

The commission conducts full evaluations on accredited institutions every 10 years and periodic reviews every five years. The next full review is scheduled in 1999

BU will be focal point for regional development

Bloomsburg University has received a technical assistance grant from the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU) that will establish the institution as a "local point" for regional development.

G. Michael Vavrek, dean of the School of Extended Programs, says the grant will help Bloomsburg "find the university's most suitable role" in helping to develop our region.

"We have been awarded this grant from AASCU's Center for Economic and Community Development basically to pay for consulting services," said Vavrek, noting that AASCU receives some of its funding from the Exxon Education Foundation.

Bloomsburg will receive assistance from two experts who will help the university complete the first two phases of AASCU's eight-step plan for implementing and evaluating economic and community development activities. The university has already selected one consultant — Gerald Gordon, executive director of the Economic Development Authority in Fairfax County, Virginia — who has been trained by AASCU.

"Later on in the process, we will choose an educator as our second consultant to help us with another part of the project," Vavrek noted.

The initial phase of the project deals with collecting and analyzing data on existing economic and community development programs offered at the university and throughout the Bloomsburg region. The second phase calls for identifying the project's specific objectives, budgeting and organizing committees made up of university officials and regional leaders.

The last six phases include organizing the project, defining economic and community development, analyzing the environment, goalsetting, implementing programs and evaluating results.

Vavrek says Bloomsburg is one of eight AASCU member institutions — and the only one in Pennsylvania — to receive the grant.

"One of Bloomsburg University's strategic directions is a recommitment to regional development activities ... and the School of Extended Programs is the focal point," said Vavrek. "Since the university has been recognized as taking a more active role in developing our region, AASCU has provided us with a process that will apply the university's resources ... and help this region to develop."

The university's service region comprises a 40-mile radius around

Faculty member dies at 46

J. Edward Kerlin, 46, professor of mathematics and computer science at BU for 13 years, died suddenly on July 13 while exercising. He was an avid runner.

"The university community was deeply shocked and saddened by the untimely death of Dr. Kerlin," said President Harry Ausprich. "We will miss him, both as a competent professional and valued friend."

Kerlin

Dr. Kerlin earned his bachelor's degree at Florida Atlantic University in 1966, his master's degree and Ph.D. at the University of California, Irvine, in 1968 and 1970 respectively.

Prior to joining the BU faculty, he was an assistant professor at the University of Kentucky for eight years.

He was co-author of the book, Computer Graphics, and wrote numerous articles for publication in various math journals.

Surviving are his wife, the former Kathy Clemes; two daughters, Kristin and Kimberly; and three brothers, H. Roy, Robert and Richard.

A scholarship program in memory of Dr. Kerlin has been established to support worthy students in the department of mathematics, according to Anthony Iamiero, assistant vice president for development. Checks — made payable to BU Foundation/Kerlin Scholarship Fund — may be sent to the Development Office at BU.

Bloomsburg that primarily consists of 11 counties — Columbia, Luzerne, Lycoming, Montour, Northumberland, Schuylkill, Sullivan, Carbon, Snyder, Union and Wyoming.

Vavrek believes the project will enhance the university's public service activities in the region and help the institution define what it can do to assist economic and community development here.

"After the project is finished, we hope there will be greater use of university resources by the people who live in our region," he said.

"It's a timely opportunity for Bloomsburg University ... and the university is ready for the challenge," he added.

Education program accreditation reaffirmed

The School of Education at BU has had its accreditation reaffirmed by the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE), culminating nearly three years of preparation by university administrators and teacher education faculty.

Macauley

NCATE, which accredits approximately 520 teacher education programs at colleges and universities nationwide, reaffirmed Bloomsburg's undergraduate (basic) and graduate (advanced) programs through the 1991-1995 academic year, said Howard Macauley, dean of the College of Professional Studies.

"NCATE reevaluates its accredited institutions every five years," Macauley said, noting that an evaluation team visited the university last November.

Macauley serves on NCATE's 100-member board of examiners and has participated in three NCATE evaluations during the last two years. He said NCATE's standards are "set by your peers" and are extremely rigorous.

"Last fall, one of every three teacher education programs reviewed in the United States was denied accreditation from NCATE," he noted, adding that "NCATE's standards were written chiefly by teachers and professors in the field of education — and in the various disciplines."

NCATE's mission is two-fold: to require a level of quality in professional education that fosters competent practice of graduates, and to encourage institutions to meet rigorous academic standards of excellence in professional education.

"There are 18 standards composed of 94 criteria that institutions must respond to on both the undergraduate or 'basic' level and the graduate or 'advanced' level," said Macauley.

"Essentially, they affirm what we say we are doing. If, for example, you tell NCATE that your program has a large emphasis on field experiences, then you better have them. The evaluation team doesn't want to hear about it — they want to see it."

Receiving accreditation from NCATE ensures that a teacher education program has maintained national standards of quality. "Some states provide reciprocity of teaching certificates or licenses to teachers who graduate from NCATE-accredited institutions," Macanley said.

Ann Lee, director of the School of Education, said she was "very pleased" at the outcome of this particular NCATE evaluation.

"We've had (NCATE) evaluations before ... but this year was more rigorous because the standards have been completely redesigned," she said. "The NCATE team even went out into the public schools to observe our supervisors and students. They truly left no stone unturned during their visit."

In addition to receiving reaccreditation from NCATE, the Pennsylvania Department of Education gave "program approval" for the next five years to all 33 teacher education specialties offered at Bloomsburg.

"With NCATE, the entire teacher education program is either accredited or not accredited," Lee noted. "PDE, on the other hand, examines each individual program specialty that we offer ... and they're only interested in the programs that result in certification."

Bloomsburg first received NCATE accreditation in 1954 and has had it reaffirmed every five years thereafter, noted Lee. The next evaluation is scheduled in the fall of 1995.

"We've already begun to prepare for their next visit," she added.

SHARE-A-DAY

with a Bloomsburg student

The Alumni Association and the Husky Ambassadors are initiating a new career program in which we will match students who are interested in certain careers with alumni who are already successful in those careers. By spending a day (or part of a day) with alumni on the job, students can gain first-hand information and can benefit from the experience of the alumni.

By establishing a data base on the computer, we will be able to match students and alumni according to career area and geographic location. Since many students will be interested in taking advantage of this program in their home areas during the summer or other vacation periods, we urge alumni from all geographic areas to participate in this important program.

Nursing department receives grant

A grant totaling $101,332 from the Helene Fuld Health Trust has been awarded to the nursing department at BU to purchase computers for an instructional laboratory in the McCormick Human Services Center.

The grant will enable the department to purchase state-of-the-art computer-assisted instructional and interactive video equipment

"Our students need to be able to engage in critical thinking, responsible decision making, and they must learn how to prioritize delivering health care," says chairperson Nancy Omischak. "The computer-assisted teaching and learning strategy will enhance our students' use of these types of skills."

Nursing faculty members Sharon Krebbs, Jean Berry and Alexis Perry, who collectively wrote the grant proposal, "volunteered to take on this task," Omischak notes. "They worked independently and put in an unbelievable amount of time collecting data and writing the proposal."

Krebbs, who serves as the program's assistant chairperson, says the nursing profession is "changing and evolving" into areas of high technology where computers are becoming commonplace. "We're living in an information society that relies on computers . . . and many of our nursing students are not computer literate," she says.

"In nursing, we are preparing life-long learners," adds Krebbs. "For our graduates to be marketable, they will have to get into the mainstream of technology, and that means they'll have to learn how to use computers and interactive video equipment."

Berry, an assistant professor of nursing, believes the days of "straight lecture" and "communicating basic knowledge" are gone. "This equipment will enable our students to prepare better for progressive, 21st century learning," she says. "With this system, our graduate and undergraduate students and faculty can put themselves in simulated clinical situations."

Perry, an assistant professor of nursing, feels Bloomsburg nursing students will benefit from having a computer and interactive video laboratory on campus. "Our students will feel much more comfortable as they go out into the workplace where computers have been integrated into nursing," she says.

"Eventually, the state licensing exam will be given on a computer . . . and it's real important that they feel comfortable when taking the exam."

The Helene Fuld Health Trust, a program operated through Marine Midland Bank of New York, awards financial assistance to promote the health, welfare and education of students enrolled at accredited nursing schools nationwide.

But eligibility requirements and competition make it difficult for institutions to secure grant funding. Furthermore, institutions that received a Helene Fuld grant award within the previous two years were not considered this year.

In 1988 BU's nursing department was awarded a $35,000 Helene Fuld grant to purchase bedside computers that are being used in the program's Health Assessment Lab in McCormick Center.

According to Onuschak, her faculty knew the chances of receiving a Helene Fuld grant award this year were slim. "There were 377 grant proposals received by the Helene Fuld Health Trust this year, and Bloomsburg was fortunate to be one of the 126 to receive an award," she says.

"The selection board considers the highest quality written proposals they receive," she adds. "So our three grant writers are to be commended for their outstanding work.

"We hope to have the new lab up and running by the start of the fall semester."
